of Mr. Rota's secret testimony before the House task force where he denied any wrongdoing and said he did only what superiors in the Democratic Party told him to do.

"If we keep these records hidden, the message to the American people will be: If you are an insider, if you are a favored reporter, you can see the transcripts and that's OK.... But if you are an average American citizen, you need not apply" to review the records," said Mr. Michel, Illinois Republican.

House Majority Leader Richard A. Gephardt, whose own resolution to keep the records sealed was agreed to by a vote of 244-183 along mostly party lines, said release of the documents could be harmful to the ongoing criminal probe.

"I cannot comprehend why anyone, in the face of the clear, unequivocal recommendation of the U.S. attorney, would vote to let documents out which could interfere with, damage, obstruct or bungle" the federal criminal investigation, the Missouri Democrat said.

Mr. Gephardt was referring to a letter released yesterday from Mr. Johnson, the interim U.S. attorney, who opposed release of the documents because it could impede his criminal probe. So far, Mr. Rota and eight other persons have been convicted.

When Rep. Bill Thomas of California, the ranking Republican on the House Administration Committee, accused Democrats of conspiring with the Justice Department to generate the Johnson letter, the floor fight began.

Speaker Thomas S. Foley, Washington Democrat, who was presiding over the House at the time, bolted from his chair and, after a few minutes, called the Republicans' assertions "totally and absolutely incorrect."

"Let me make it again abundantly clear," Mr. Foley said in a raised voice full of anger. "No one has talked to the United States attorney or the attorney general" about producing the letter to ensure that records remain locked up.

"I have not talked to [Attorney General] Janet Reno since she was sworn in," Mr. Foley said. He asked why Republicans had failed to have what he called the simple courtesy of checking the accuracy of their charge with him before making it on the floor.

Storm Swirls, But He Keeps Grip on Power

By Basil Talbott
Sun-Times Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON—Rep. Dan Rostenkowski's deepening troubles stirred up turmoil in the House Wednesday but did not begin to dislodge him from his seat of power.

Democratic colleagues stood by Rostenkowski, chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, although some kept a little distance. Some Republicans took indirect shots at Rostenkowski, but only gingerly.

A blowup on the House floor centered on corruption in the House post office—the scandal in which Rostenkowski has been implicated—but attacking Republicans didn't mention his name in debate. When Majority Leader Richard Gephardt (D-Mo.) indicated that Rostenkowski appeared to be their target, Rep. Robert Walker (R-Pa.) denied that he had the Chicago lawmaker in mind.

The Republicans denounced a letter to House leaders by interim U.S. Attorney J. Ramsey Johnson opposing the release of testimony taken last year in an internal House investigation of the post office scandal.

"The release of such materials could have a significant adverse effect on the ongoing criminal investigation being conducted by this office," Johnson wrote.

The letter from Johnson came after two groups of Republican legislators announced plans to seek release of interview transcripts, documents and other materials gathered during the bipartisan review last year.

Walker charged a cover-up, claiming that he had it on good authority that Speaker Thomas S. Foley had a conversation with the Justice Department before the letter from Johnson was written. Gephardt denied that Foley spoke with the U.S. attorney, but Walker said Foley's conversation was with Attorney General Janet Reno.

At a press conference, Rep. Richard Army (R-Texas), chairman of the House Republican Caucus, said that if Rostenkowski was implicated in the scheme, he should step aside as a member of the House-Senate conference commmittee that is negotiating President Clinton's deficit-reduction package.

"It would be hard for the conference committee to produce a package that would have any credibility under his direction," Army said.

Most members refrained from such attacks, however, apparently awaiting for further information from an ongoing grand jury investigation before considering a move against Rostenkowski. Democratic rules of the House call for a committee chairman who is indicted to step down from his post, but short of that there is no sanction.

"I don't want to jump on anybody until there is definitive action," said Rep. Henry J. Hyde (R-Ill.), a member of the House Republican leadership team and friend of Rostenkowski's. Hyde noted that prosecutors have said several House members were involved in embezzlement from the post office, leaving a cloud hanging over the entire institution.

Democrats are showing some concern, but have stuck by Rostenkowski as their chief negotiator on Clinton's economic program.

Rep. Mike Andrews (D-Texas), a member of Rostenkowski's conference commitee, called the reports of Rostenkowski's involvement "a bad story" but said he didn't think it would affect budget negotiations.

Though subdued, Rostenkowski

Justice Dept. Warns Against Release of House Post Office Materials

By Kenneth J. Cooper
Washington Post Staff Writer

The Justice Department yesterday asked House leaders not to release materials from an internal review of the House Post Office, warning that public disclosure could "compromise the ongoing grand jury investigation" of alleged embezzlement and other criminal activities.

The afternoon letter from Interim U.S. Attorney J. Ramsey Johnson came after two groups of Republican lawmakers announced plans to seek release of interview transcripts, documents and other materials gathered in the course of a bipartisan review concluded a year ago.

Republicans renewed their push for disclosure, which the House rejected twice last year, after former House postmaster Robert V. Rota this week pleaded guilty to misdemeanors and in court papers indicated that he helped two lawmakers embezzle tens of thousands of dollars.

"I am writing to express this office's serious concern that release of such materials could have a significant adverse effect on the ongoing criminal investigation being conducted by this office into matters associated with the House Post Office," Johnson said. "Accordingly, I ask you not to authorize the release of such materials."

Johnson's three-paragraph letter was addressed to Speaker Thomas S. Foley (D-Wash.) and Minority Leader Robert H. Michel (R-Ill.).

Earlier, Foley told reporters that Democratic leaders were seeking bipartisan agreement to disclose the investigative materials after Attorney General Janet Reno had a chance to review them and object to the release of any.

"I think the important thing is that we . . . not interfere in any way in the ongoing review by the Justice Department and U.S. attorney's office," Foley said.

A Foley aide said the speaker accepted Johnson's letter as a statement on behalf of Reno.

About a half hour after the letter was delivered, Republican leaders met to decide whether to press for disclosure as planned. Michel introduced a resolution calling for immediate release of the documents.

Several GOP lawmakers repeated their support for releasing the materials, noting that Johnson's predecessor, Jay B. Stephens, made similar requests last year. "We're committed to full disclosure," said Rep. Scott L. Klug (R-Wis.).

In separate news conferences, Republican freshmen and second-term members urged immediate release of the documents to remove suspicion from uninvolved members and shore up public confidence in the House. Klug and other Republicans last year made similar arguments for disclosures in the House Bank and House Post Office scandals.

In July 1992, Democrats and Republicans on an investigative task force issued separate reports on the post office.

The one sitting House member who court papers appear to tie to the alleged embezzlement, Ways and Means Chairman Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.), led opposition on the House floor to a GOP resolution disapproving of trade preferences for China. He seemed in a jovial mood, smiling and joking with fellow Democrats. Rostenkowski later met with Treasury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen, Office of Management and Budget Director Leon E. Panetta and Senate Finance Chairman Daniel Patrick Moynihan (D-N.Y.) to discuss President Clinton's economic package.

Stephens, the former prosecutor, said on ABC-TV's "Nightline" Tuesday that Rostenkowski may have embezzled "tens of thousands or hundreds of thousands of dollars" from the post office. He said "it's simply a matter of time" before Rostenkowski is indicted.

Stephens also charged that his removal along with other Republican appointees earlier this year delayed Rota's guilty plea for about 90 days. The delay "bought a substantial amount of time" while Rostenkowski "was performing a critical function for the administration with regard to the budget and tax bills," he said.

Johnson, interviewed on Fox television yesterday, disagreed, saying, "There was absolutely no delay."

KNIGHT-RIDDER NEWSPAPERS

Probing Congressman A

The Democrats are doing what must be done

Now that the former postmaster of the House of Representatives has admitted scheming with some lawmakers to embezzle post office funds, the storm clouds are gathering over Rep. Dan Rostenkowski of Illinois — the alleged "Congressman A" of this legal and political drama.

While the widening scandal could present problems for the Clinton administration, and could lower the public's already low regard for Congress, it's also a welcome sign that the Democratic-controlled executive branch is acting responsibly, even relentlessly, in probing other Democrats in Congress.

Many doubted that a full-scale investigation would continue after Attorney General Janet Reno sent form letters to almost all the nation's U.S. Attorneys to clean out their desks. When that happened in March, the Republican U.S. Attorney in Washington, D.C., complained publicly that his office's probe of the post office affair might get deep-sixed for political reasons. Adding credibility to his concern was the identity of one of the people being investigated: Mr. Rostenkowski, a one-man juggernaut for the Clinton economic program.

But Monday's plea bargain by the former postmaster, Robert V. Rota, seems to refute this concern. With his admission of guilt, Mr. Rota effectively identified Mr. Rostenkowski and former Rep. Joe Kolter (D., Pa.) as two members of Congress who benefited from the stamps-for-money exchanges. (Both men have denied any wrongdoing.)

If Mr. Rostenkowski is indicted, it would deprive President Clinton of a key ally on upcoming fights such as health-care reform because the rules would require him to step aside as chairman of the Ways and Means Committee. And if he were found guilty of embezzlement, he might well be expelled from Congress.

That would be an ignominious end to a congressional career whose high points (such as his work for low-income tax relief, loophole-closing and deficit-cutting) have thus far exceeded their low points (such as secretive tax breaks for favored corporations and fat cats).

Whether people like the guy or not, the public should be glad to see this investigation moving forward. Americans want justice to be pursued without regard to politics, and thus far, that's what they're getting.

"In any event, both of the daughters were paid by the exchange only for hours they worked."

Exchange records show that Stacy has received $154,648 since she was hired by Donovan in 1984. Stacy was carried on the CBOT's books as a full-time employee for four years, reverting to part-time status in 1990. She last worked in June as a $15-an-hour assistant to David Prosperi, the exchange's vice president in charge of communications, officials said.

Dawn, who was carried on the CBOT personnel roster as a $15-an-hour part-time employee, has not drawn a paycheck since December 1990, exchange records show. CBOT records disclosing her total compensation were not immediately available, Prosperi said.

Industry sources said the daughters worked less than 10 percent of the time for which they were compensated, and when they did show up for work, they either were unqualified for their assigned tasks or refused to carry them out.

Exchange insiders said the sisters frequently were shunted from one department to the next by CBOT managers in such departments as marketing because they were untrained or unwilling to work. Ultimately, the two were assigned as chaperones in the CBOT's viewing gallery on the fifth floor, where they greeted visitors, "because they could do the least damage there," one source said.

When the two women did report for work, sources said, they sometimes created ill will among other employees because they flaunted their liberal working arrangements, their pay—which was as much as $7 an hour more than their counterparts in the visitors' gallery—and the fact that they received annual bonuses.

In an interview, Donovan said he hired the two women, whom he has known for 25 years, without intervention from their father. Donovan described the girls as "very polite and highly qualified."

Donovan said Dawn was hired in October 1983 after she came to him and voiced a desire to work part-time to supplement her income as a United Airlines flight attendant. The following year, he said, Stacy was hired to work full-time after she was laid off as a Delta Airlines flight attendant, fell ill, and needed work and an employer-sponsored medical plan. She has since returned to work for Delta.

"At no time did those girls get paid without working for that pay," Donovan said. "First, I would never allow my job to be jeopardized by doing such a thing, and secondly, if Danny ever found out such a thing was going on, he would be furious.

"Of all the elected officials I have met and been friendly with, Congressman Rostenkowski has asked the least of this exchange. Our political action committee only rarely reaches the maximum contributions allowed annually [to him]," said Donovan.

Rostenkowski is easily the most important ally of the CBOT and Chicago's other major futures exchange, the Chicago Mercantile Exchange. A featured speaker at the Futures Industry Association's annual Florida conference, Rostenkowski has taken credit for killing three attempts—twice by the Bush administration and once by Clinton's—to impose a tax on futures transactions.

Stacy was hired as a full-time employee in December 1984 at a starting annual salary of $25,000 in addition to a yearly bonus of several thousand dollars. In 1986 her annual salary was boosted to $30,500, where it remained until the end of 1989, when she reverted to $15-an-hour part-time employment.

Dawn, hired by Donovan in October 1983, worked only part-time, at a rate of $15 an hour, exchange officials said. Sources said Dawn, like her sister, received an annual bonus, even though she was a part-time employee.

"They both got huge bonuses, which they did not deserve, and they would laugh about them and show other employees their paychecks," one source said. "Once Dawn complained that her bonus was not large enough, and they coughed up more."

The Rostenkowski children are no newcomers to jobs with connections. At age 15, Stacy landed a part-time job with State Sen. Norbert Kosinski, the 32nd Ward's man in Springfield until his death in 1978. Later, she got a $15,000-a-year job with his replacement, Sen. Walter J. Nega, Rostenkowski's longtime administrative assistant.

During a four-year period in the mid-80s, Dawn earned a $12,000 annual salary as an aide to former State Sen. Edward Nedza.

Robb Challenger Blasts Clinton Over House Probe

By Kent Jenkins Jr.
Washington Post Staff Writer

In a move that analysts say could boost his prospects as a U.S. Senate candidate in Virginia, former U.S. attorney Jay B. Stephens has accused the White House of interfering with an investigation of Capitol Hill corruption that he led.

Stephens, a Republican, alleged in a nationally televised interview this week that the Clinton administration has delayed a probe of wrongdoing at the House of Representatives Post Office, largely to protect a senior House Democrat.

Stephens, who lives in Fairfax County, is one of three Republicans actively seeking the GOP nomination for the Senate seat held by Democrat Charles S. Robb. Though the election is 16 months away, Stephens already has made his work prosecuting public corruption as U.S. attorney for the District his primary political theme.

In an interview Tuesday night on ABC's "Nightline," Stephens never mentioned his political aspirations. But he accused the Clinton White House of seeking "to delay immediate action" in an investigation of Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.), the chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee. Stephens also said that "my sense is it's simply a matter of time" before Rostenkowski is indicted.

Several analysts said yesterday that Stephens's high-profile role as a critic of the Democratic-controlled Congress will almost certainly increase his appeal to Virginia Republicans. But they said that Stephens starts well behind one other GOP candidate, Oliver L. North, and that he risks criticism for mixing politics with legal matters.

"I'm sure he would deny that the Senate candidacy had anything to do with what he said about the investigation at all," said Larry J. Sabato, a political scientist at the University of Virginia. "But it's certainly a wonderful marriage of policy and politics. It's a great horse for him to ride."

Stephens's work with the House Post Office investigation "sets him up nicely to be the second Republican Senate candidate challenging the current Congress," said Mark J. Rozell, a political scientist at George Mason University. "The public is [illegible] who frequently criticizes Congress's treatment of him in the Iran-contra scandal.

"Stephens's one best chance is to provide a contrast between himself and Oliver North," said Mark J. Rozelle, a political scientist at Mary Washington College. "This allows Stephens to point out that he was fighting crime while Oliver North was being indicted. He can also capitalize on the anti-Congress mood."

In an interview yesterday, Stephens said his comments were not politically motivated. "In my mind I was wearing a law-enforcement hat," he said. "I'm still in prosecutor mode. "I have a record of 15 years of professional law enforcement, and I was asked to dicuss a case. My comments reflect that backdrop."

Stephens served as the U.S. attorney for the District for five years, from 1998 until April, when President Clinton fired him as part of a mass dismissal of Republican-appointed federal prosecutors. The most celebrated case of his tenure was the conviction of then-D.C. Mayor Marion Barry on a drug charge.

When he lost his job, Stephens said the House Post Office investigation was at a "critical stage" and accused the White House of trying to derail it. He went further in the "Nightline" interview, suggesting that the only way Rostenkowski could avoid indictment is via White House intervention.

"If no further action is taken in this case," Stephens said, "I think it would raise very serious questions about whether or not effort was made to derail or further delay this investigation."

Stephens's political hopes are based almost entirely on his career as a prosecutor. He has never run for office and has relatively few ties to the Virginia GOP establishment. In a speech to the state party convention last month, Stephens won applause by prominently mentioning the Barry and House Post Office probes.

North and the other Republican seeking the Senate nomination, Reagan administration budget director James C. Miller, said yesterday they believe Stephens's concerns about the Post Office investigation are justified.

North's chief of staff, Mark Merritt, said that Stephens "may have a point ... he's saying the same things he said as prosecutor, and there's nothing wrong with it."

Miller said that "from what I've heard [Stephens] say, I don't think he's taking undue political liberties."

The Real Rostenkowski Problem

A front-page picture yesterday showed President Clinton lunching amiably with Representative Dan Rostenkowski of Illinois, just a day after the powerful chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee was linked in court to an embezzlement scandal at the House Post Office. The smiles on their faces masked the awkwardness of the moment.

Don't worry, say Democratic lawmakers, Mr. Rostenkowski's troubles won't affect the President's deficit-reduction program. It's hard to believe that Mr. Rostenkowski's legendary legislative skills won't be hurt. But his skills are not the issue; the issue is the cloud that hovers over his head.

His colleagues remain in deep denial about that cloud. True, he says he's innocent, and has not formally been charged with anything. But whether or not the current allegations lead to indictment, he rendered himself unfit for a leadership post a year ago when he refused to testify before a grand jury looking into possible corruption in the House. The latest disclosures merely underscore the cowardice of House Democrats who refuse to offend their influential colleague.

When Attorney General Janet Reno clumsily demanded the resignation of all United States Attorneys back in March, she raised fears that the new Administration might try to derail the financial auditing of Mr. Rostenkowski begun by the Republican U.S. Attorney Jay Stephens. But this week that office — now answerable to a Democratic Administration — reached a plea-bargain agreement with Robert Rota, the former Postmaster of the House of Representatives.

To Ms. Reno's credit, the investigation begun by Mr. Stephens appears to be proceeding without political interference. Mr. Rota pleaded guilty to one count of conspiracy and two counts of embezzlement. He said he had helped Mr. Rostenkowski — identified in court papers as "Congressman A" — steal more than $20,000. Prosecutors are said to be gathering evidence of transactions in Chicago, in an effort to link separate accusations into a more serious case.

Meanwhile Mr. Rostenkowski continues to influence budget, health care, welfare and other areas under the Ways and Means Committee's jurisdiction. That seems increasingly inappropriate.

Some news reports allege other dubious transactions by Mr. Rostenkowski involving misuse of campaign funds. By themselves those reports, along with Mr. Rota's accusation, wouldn't justify depriving Mr. Rostenkowski of his chairmanship — or President Clinton of the Congressman's talents. But last summer Mr. Rostenkowski should have been willing to testify openly and under oath about House operations to a grand jury. He cited his Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination. That was his right as a citizen, and as a member of Congress. But by evading scrutiny and responsibility he forfeited any claim to his pivotal position.

The Democrats could have acted earlier when a transition would have been less disruptive. No one, not even the able Mr. Rostenkowski, is indispensable. To let him remain front and center in the budget process now can only breed further disrespect for Congress and many more awkward moments for the President. Mr. Rostenkowski's colleagues should ask him to step aside now.

House scandal heating up

GOP spotlights Rostenkowski's role

By DAVID HESS
Herald Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — The controversy over possible thefts from the House Post Office by House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., and other Democrats continued Wednesday as the U.S. attorney warned that Republican demands for release of House files related to the case could impede his inquiry.

Rostenkowski was identified as a target in an ongoing Justice Department investigation of House Post Office thefts earlier this week when former House Postmaster Robert Rota pleaded guilty to embezzlement charges.

Several Republicans made clear Wednesday that they intend to turn up the heat under majority Democrats by demanding immediate disclosure of the post office files. They believe the files would finger Rostenkowski and perhaps as many as eight or 10 other members, mostly Democrats.

Rostenkowski

Acting U.S. Attorney J. Ramsey Johnson urged House leaders Wednesday to resist the pressure for instant disclosure of the files.

"I am writing to express this office's serious concern that the release of such materials could have a significant adverse effect on the ongoing criminal investigation [of] the House Post Office," Johnson wrote. "Accordingly, I ask you not to authorize the release of such materials."

The papers in question formed the investigative record of a bipartisan task force that last year probed various allegations of wrongdoing by Rota, several post office employees and members of Congress.

The task force excoriated the operations of the post office and forced Rota's departure, but came to no conclusion on whether specific members of Congress had been involved in criminal misdeeds.

Rostenkowski's troubles could not have come at a worse time for President Clinton.

The president and his top advisers have been banking on Rostenkowski's clout and skill to help steer Clinton's controversial budget package through the current House-Senate conference.

But Rostenkowski's reputation has been battered and his influence threatened by Rota's guilty plea.

Rep. Dick Armey, R-Texas, said that if Rostenkowski is the culprit that Rota identified to federal prosecutors as part of the embezzlement scheme, "then he should step aside from presiding over the largest tax increase in American history."

The GOP has insisted that Clinton's budget package, which calls for a $500 billion reduction in the deficit through a combination of tax hikes and spending cuts, is essentially a big tax bill.

Under House rules, Rostenkowski would not be obliged to step aside unless he was indicted.

But Armey said he should do so now.

"It's a matter of trust," the Texas conservative said. "It would be hard for the conference committee to produce a package that would have credibility under his direction."

Over the past two days, Rostenkowski has been lauded and defended by the president and top administration aides. On Wednesday morning, Treasury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen was asked if Rostenkowski's legal troubles were hurting Clinton's bill in the conference.

"I don't think that's a part of the conference, or a part of the problem," Bentsen said.

Democrats keep postal data secret

Rostenkowski's lawyer angers U.S. attorney

By Paul M. Rodriguez
THE WASHINGTON TIMES

Delay? An attorney for Rep. Dan Rostenkowski tried to postpone a court plea implicating the lawmaker.

Democrats defeated Republican efforts to make public secret documents on the House post office yesterday amid disclosures that an attorney for Rep. Dan Rostenkowski tried to delay a damaging guilty plea by the former postmaster.

Mr. Rostenkowski is one of several current and former lawmakers implicated in an illegal scheme to embezzle and launder money through the congressional mail facility.

Justice Department spokesman Dean St. Dennis confirmed to the Associated Press a report in yesterday's Chicago Sun-Times that an attorney for Mr. Rostenkowski attempted to delay a court proceeding Monday at which former House Postmaster Robert V. Rota pleaded guilty and implicated the Illinois Democrat.

The Sun-Times reported that one of Mr. Rostenkowski's attorneys had placed at least one call to an unnamed Justice Department official and sought to delay the Rota plea agreement until after a joint House-Senate conference committee completes work on President Clinton's $500 billion budget package.

Mr. Rostenkowski, chairman of the tax-writing House Ways and Means Committee, is a key member of the conference committee in support of the Clinton plan.

U.S. Attorney J. Ramsey Johnson reportedly is angry about the contact between Mr. Rostenkowski's attorney and the Justice Department, but sources could not confirm whether he was told previously about the attempt to delay the Rota guilty plea.

Mr. Rota, 58, pleaded guilty to three misdemeanor counts of embezzlement and of aiding and abetting an illegal scheme to convert congressional expense vouchers and stamps into cash for several members of Congress during his 20-year tenure as postmaster of the House.

Mr. St. Dennis did not identify the Rostenkowski attorney or the Justice Department official involved in the attempt to delay the conviction, but did confirm that the contact took place before Mr. Rota's guilty plea was filed in U.S. District Court.

Beside the issue of seeking to delay the timing of a guilty plea, the conversation or conversations that took place between Mr. Rostenkowski's unnamed attorney and the Justice Department official raises a host of larger questions, according to current and former congressional and Justice Department officials contacted by The Washington Times.

"Something is terribly wrong here," said one of several officials who spoke with The Times on the condition of anonymity. "Obviously, they [Mr. Rostenkowski's attorneys] knew what was going on, which raises some very serious questions about the confidentiality of the U.S. Attorney's Office or the Justice Department," the official said.

Besides a breech in what otherwise is supposed to be confidential information, said another official, "the fact that Rostenkowski's lawyer felt comfortable to even make such a call and then to make such a request shows there's more than just a problem [with confidentiality]. It shows there's been an ongoing dialogue somewhere that has compromised the U.S. attorney's investigation," the second official said.

"There should be an internal investigation by the attorney general and a stop put to this," the official added.

Other officials also pointed out that this is not the first time that attorneys for Mr. Rostenkowski have sought to interfere with the ongoing criminal probe, which was started in the summer of 1991 after U.S. Capitol Police discovered an employee had stolen funds from the House Post Office.

"There have been other attempts to delay or intimidate the prosecutors in this case," said one of the officials.

"There has been a pattern of calls and implied threats before about how prosecutors would be fired or that the investigation would be stopped by the incoming [Clinton] administration," another official confirmed.

"I wouldn't say that all of these conversations are illegal, but some come perilously close to obstruction," the official said.

It was this theme of obstruction or political collusion by Democrats in wanting to withhold the secret documents of the House task force investigation that dominated most of the fiery, two-hour debate over the records yesterday in the House.

House Minority Leader Robert H. Michel, who introduced a resolution to make public the secret documents said that "once again, the fetid odor of congressional scandal pollutes the political atmosphere."

Mr. Michel, whose resolution was defeated 242-186 mostly along party lines, decided to seek the release of the year-old documents because Mr. Rota not only implicated Mr. Rostenkowksi and former Rep. Joe Kolter, Pennyslvania Democrat, but also admitted to lying to congressional investigators last year and to federal agents in 1979 about criminal activities.

The Times last year and the Associated Press this week ran excerpts of Mr. Rota's secret testimony before the House task force where he denied any wrongdoing and said he did only what superiors in the Democratic Party told him to do.

"If we keep these records hidden, the message to the American people will be: If you are an insider, if you are a favored reporter, you can see the transcripts and that's OK.... But if you are an average American citizen, you need not apply" to review the records," said Mr. Michel, Illinois Republican.

House Majority Leader Richard A. Gephardt, whose own resolution to keep the records sealed was agreed to by a vote of 244-183 along mostly party lines, said release of the documents could be harmful to the ongoing criminal probe.

"I cannot comprehend why anyone, in the face of the clear, unequivocal recommendation of the U.S. attorney, would vote to let documents out which could interfere with, damage, obstruct or bungle" the federal criminal investigation, the Missouri Democrat said.

Mr. Gephardt was referring to a letter released yesterday from Mr. Johnson, the interim U.S. attorney, who opposed release of the documents because it could impede his criminal probe. So far, Mr. Rota and eight other persons have been convicted.

When Rep. Bill Thomas of California, the ranking Republican on the House Administration Committee, accused Democrats of conspiring with the Justice Department to generate the Johnson letter, the floor fight began.

Speaker Thomas S. Foley, Washington Democrat, who was presiding over the House at the time, bolted from his chair and, after a few minutes, called the Republicans' assertions "totally and absolutely incorrect."

"Let me make it again abundantly clear," Mr. Foley said in a raised voice full of anger. "No one has talked to the United States attorney or the attorney general" about producing the letter to ensure that records remain locked up.

"I have not talked to [Attorney General] Janet Reno since she was sworn in," Mr. Foley said. He asked why Republicans had failed to have what he called the simple courtesy of checking the accuracy of their charge with him before making it on the floor.

"At the heart of this debate is a prolonged, systematic pattern of denial, of silence, of secrets known to the select few, of winks and nods among the old boy network in the majority," Michel said.

The Republicans renewed their demands for disclosure after former House postmaster Robert V. Rota pleaded guilty this week to misdemeanors and court papers were filed showing that he helped two lawmakers embezzle tens of thousands of dollars by allowing them to trade in stamps and vouchers for cash.

Although the two members were not named, the court papers and House records pointed to House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) and

House Votes to Withhold Post Office Documents

Democrats Claim Release Would Jeopardize Federal Prosecution; GOP Charges Coverup

By Eric Pianin
Washington Post Staff Writer

Democrats yesterday rejected Republican demands to release documents from a 1992 internal probe of the House Post Office, claiming the release would undermine a federal grand jury investigation of alleged embezzlement and other wrongdoing.

Following a venomously partisan debate on the floor, the House voted 244 to 183 to withhold the documents. Eleven Democrats joined with the Republicans in calling for the release.

Armed with a letter from Interim U.S. Attorney J. Ramsey Johnson urging that the documents and transcripts be withheld, Democrats had charged that the Republicans were out to "rev up" the talk shows and score political points, even if it meant "blowing the case."

But Republicans, led by House Minority Leader Robert H. Michel (R-Ill.), said they sensed a Democratic coverup and complained that unless the documents were released, all House members would be operating under a "cloud of suspicion."

former representative Joe P. Kolter (D-Pa.).

"Let's summon up our last remaining shreds of courage and dignity and let Americans see what the insiders already know," said Michel.

Republicans argued that it was senseless at this point to withhold the year-old material when some of it was beginning to leak out. Yesterday, the Associated Press reported that Rota had denied any knowledge of improper stamps-for-cash swaps involving House members, and said its information was based on a review of 209 pages of the unreleased transcript.

But Democrats said it would be absurd and reckless to ignore the warning of federal prosecutor Johnson, a holdover from a Republican administration, that release of the material "could have significant adverse effect on the ongoing criminal investigation."

"I cannot comprehend why anyone, in the face of the clear unequivocal recommendation of the U.S. attorney, unsolicited by this House, would want to go ahead and vote to send these materials out which could injure . . . or bungle" the investigation, said House Majority Leader Richard A. Gephardt (D-Mo.).

The crucial House vote was on a resolution offered by Gephardt that would delay action on the question of releasing the transcripts and documents until the federal prosecutor indicated he had no objections.

Separately, the House voted 242 to 186 to table Michel's resolution, which called for the immediate release of the material.

The debate was evocative of the bitter partisan rhetoric of a year ago, when Republicans sought to gain political mileage from the House bank scandal, an episode that ultimately ended the careers of several Republicans as well as Democrats. At a time when polls suggest widespread public distrust and disgust with Congress, yesterday's brawl provided more grist for cynics.

Rep. William M. Thomas (R-Calif.) charged during the debate that House Speaker Thomas S. Foley (D-Wash.) had solicited the letter from Johnson during a telephone conversation with Attorney General Janet Reno. Thomas was forced to apologize after a seething Foley took the floor and denied he had spoken to Reno or any other Justice Department official about the case.

Foley complained that Republicans were engaging in "broad brush insinuations and accusations." Earlier in the day, he also lectured reporters about Rostenkowski's presumed innocence, in response to questions about the chairman's legal problems. Foley denied that the documents implicating Rostenkowski in the grand jury investigation had hurt his effectiveness in negotiating a budget compromise, and said he rejected suggestions that the Illinois Democrat should step aside.

"I have confidence in Mr. Rostenkowski as an honest person, that he's effectively conducting his responsibilities, and he's carrying on," Foley said. "At the present time, he's not accused of any offense."

House Aide's Story: Cash for 'Friend' Rosty

WASHINGTON—James C. Smith was at his desk in his messy basement office in the Capitol one summer day in 1989 when his boss, the House postmaster, came in, closed the door and pulled an envelope from his jacket pocket that contained some paper work signed by Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.).

The document was a congressional expense account voucher for postage stamps. But postmaster Robert V. Rota did not really want stamps, Smith told the Chicago Sun-Times. Rota wanted Smith to give him $2,000. The cash, he said, was for Rostenkowski.

"Can we do that?" Smith asked him.

"Look," Rota replied. "He [Rostenkowski] is our friend. He takes care of you. He takes care of me. And this is the way he wants us to do it for him."

Looking back years later, Smith recalled his reaction: "I was no doubt taken aback when I saw his [Rostenkowski's] name on the voucher. I couldn't believe it was him."

A Georgia native who worked his way up the Capitol Hill patronage ladder, Smith owed his job at the post office to Rostenkowski. Smith retired from the office just this spring. Earlier this year, he was called to testify, under a grant of immunity, before the federal grand jury investigating post office embezzlement.

According to federal prosecutors, Rota helped a number of House members embezzle cash totaling tens of thousands of dollars in taxpayer money from the House post office. Rota has admitted giving the members cash in exchange for office vouchers or for postage stamps obtained with vouchers.

The charges against Rota list 12 separate instances in which "Congressman A"—whom sources have identified as Rostenkowski—exchanged stamps or vouchers for cash from 1985 to 1987 and from 1989 to 1991.

Smith had worked at the post office since 1960 and was promoted in the spring of 1989 to office supervisor of accounts. Rostenkowski had a hand in the promotion.

Smith's predecessor in the job of controlling the cash in the post office had been Paul Tomme, an attorney who now lives in Texas. Rota admitted this week when he pleaded guilty to embezzlement of post office funds that he did not trust Tomme. The cash arrangement had been interrupted during Tomme's brief tenure, court records indicate.

When Tomme moved on, Rostenkowski made a strong push for Smith to get the job, according to Smith and the legal papers in Rota's court case. The way Assistant U.S. Attorney Thomas J. Motley put it, Smith got the job "with the personal intervention and insistence" of "Congressman A."

Robert V. Rota

Smith felt a sense of loyalty to Rostenkowski that he said played into his thinking on that first occasion when he said Rota approached him for cash for the Chicago congressman. "He was my patron, my sponsor. Rota was my boss. So here I had my patron and my boss saying to do this. Rostenkowski is a hard man to turn down. Even his colleagues are wary of him. [Former] Congressman [Thomas J.] Downey has referred to him as a 500-pound gorilla."

So, as Smith put it, "I did what I thought I had to do."

Smith said that, so far as he knows, the money he provided for Rostenkowski was given directly to the congressman. "I never handed Rostenkowski any money directly," Smith said. "It was all done through Rota."

FBI/DC

Smith says he was brought under Rostenkowski's wing by the congressman's longtime Capitol Hill office manager, Virginia C. Fletcher. Rota warned him during that first meeting in the basement of the Longworth House Office Building not to talk with Fletcher about the cash for Rostenkowski. Smith said Rota added, "You know, he [Rostenkowski] is very touchy about his private business."

Fletcher also has been subpoenaed under an immunity grant to testify to the grand jury investigating Rostenkowski, but Smith said, "Virginia is totally innocent."

Smith said Rostenkowski was the chief beneficiary of the arrangement but Rota provided cash for other congressmen.

Former Rep. Joseph Kolter (D-Pa.) has been mentioned in court documents. His congressional expense records were subpoenaed along with Rostenkowski's in May, 1992. But from what Smith said he witnessed, "Kolter was much less involved in this."

Rostenkowski has not been charged with any crime in the post office case. The jury investigation is continuing, also focusing on Rostenkowski's personal and campaign finances.

Attorneys for Rostenkowski and Rota did not return calls.

Smith said he goes back and forth in his feelings toward Rostenkowski. "I feel sorry for him. It's a terrible thing to fall from such a high place," he said.

"It's not like this is an evil man we're dealing with here," Smith said. "He gives thousands of dollars to charities. He's a good congressman."

Smith has been under pressure himself during the investigation, especially after newspapers identified him as a witness cooperating with prosecutors.

"I was sorry about the whole thing. It is very painful for everybody," said Smith. "I wish it hadn't happened."

JAMES C. SMITH

James C. Smith was raised in Atlanta and went north to Washington to go to college. He landed his first job on Capitol Hill in 1959, working for then-Rep. James C. Davis (D-Ga.).

Smith's first job with the House post office in 1960 was as a mail carrier to offices in the Cannon House Office Building. Under the patronage system on Capitol Hill, he was kept on by a series of sponsors as the representatives he worked for came and went.

When House Speaker John W. McCormick (D-Mass.) retired in 1970—the same year federal prosecutors in Washington pursued allegations of influence peddling in the speaker's office—Smith heard about a patronage opening in the office of Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.). He apparently impressed Rostenkowski's top aide and, without meeting the congressman, he secured the post office post that he kept for the next two decades.

Smith retired in April. He still lives in an apartment on Capitol Hill.

Foley Leaps To Defense As Cover-up Charges Fly

WASHINGTON—House Speaker Thomas S. Foley (D-Wash.) passionately defended Rep. Dan Rostenkowski on Thursday as "an honest person" while House Democrats crushed a Republican bid to pry loose the secret "post office papers."

In a day of emotional explosions, Foley and House Minority Leader Robert H. Michel (R-Ill.) battled over whether to make public year-old transcripts of interviews with principals in the House post office scandal. Democrats won a 244-183 vote to keep a lid on the papers until the Justice Department finishes its investigation.

Thomas S. Foley

Robert H. Michel

Foley's defense of Rostenkowski came during the speaker's daily press conference, when reporters pressed him about the case. Foley lit into Republicans for accusing him of engaging in a cover-up of the post office scandal. He took to task the New York Times for saying Rostenkowski, chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, should step down as a member of the conference committee negotiating President Clinton's economic program.

Asked whether he still had full confidence in Rostenkowski, Foley scoffed at what he called "allegations and innuendos."

"I have confidence in Mr. Rostenkowski as an honest person, that he's effectively conducting his responsibilities," Foley said.

Republicans have alleged that Foley solicited a letter from federal prosecutor J. Ramsey Johnson urging the House not to release documents from an internal investigation because it could "have a significant adverse effect on the ongoing criminal investigaton."

At the peak emotional moment, Rep. Bill Thomas (R-Calif.) challenged Foley to come to the floor and deny that he had talked to Attorney General Janet Reno before Johnson sent his letter.

Foley, who says he has not talked to Reno since she took office, came to the floor, an unusual move, and repeated his denial.

Chagrined, Thomas apologized to Foley, but Michel kept up the fight. Matching Foley's earlier anger, Michel raged because he had not been informed years ago of charges of corruption in the post office. "I feel I've been had," Michel said. If he had known of the first charges 13 years ago, Michel said, he would have pressed for a far different investigation."

Keep Politics Apart From Rosty Probe

Politics ought not interfere with the investigation of Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) And the Justice Department, under Attorney General Janet Reno, doesn't appear to be letting that happen.

Oustide the Beltway, everyday Americans clearly understand why a criminal probe ought not be compromised by politics, no matter who's affected.

But that's asking a lot in Washington, where pressure from Democrats and Republicans to tamper with this lengthy investigation is building by the day.

Federal investigators have been trying to determine whether there is a pattern to Rostenkowski's use of congressional or campaign expense funds to enrich himself and members of his family. The probe has lasted more than a year, beginning with an investigation of the House Post Office.

Now, the investigation reportedly encompasses an extensive examination of Rostenkowski's car and office leases. As first reported in this newspaper late last year, Rostenkowski may have violated federal law by charging what appear to be personal and family expenses to congressional or campaign funds.

Monday's guilty plea by former House postmaster Robert V. Rota to charges that appear to link the congressman to embezzlement only added pressure. Nervous Democrats openly suggest Republican holdovers at the Justice Department have it in for Rostenkowski, chairman the House Ways and Means Committee and a key point person for President Clinton in budget deliberations. Conversely, Republicans charge House Democrats with a cover-up in their own investigation last year.

So far, Reno appears to have played things straight. As reported in this newspaper on Thursday, Rostenkowski's lawyer had tried to convince a Justice Department official that implicating the congressman now would weaken his role in negotiations over Clinton's economic plan. Prosecutors rightly decided that no one is above the law.

Meantime, U.S. Attorney J. Ramsey Johnson opposed Republican calls for the release of documents used by a House task force investigating the House Post Office operations. The findings of the task force were a sham. But release of the documents could prove harmful to the investigation, Johnson argued.

The House voted 244-183 to keep the transcripts under wraps. They apparently involve testimony from many of the same witnesses and records of many of the same transactions currently under investigation by the Justice Department.

This time, the House got it right. The politicians need to step back and allow Justice to proceed at its current pace.

Daley Rips Ex-Prosecutor for Network TV Comments

Mayor Daley on Thursday accused the former federal prosecutor who built the case against Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) of a breach of ethics for comments made about the Chicago congressman on network television.

Daley said he was astounded to hear former U.S. Attorney Jay B. Stephens tell Ted Koppel on ABC's "Nightline" program that it is "simply a matter of time" before Rostenkowski is indicted and that the congressman may have embezzled "tens of thousands or hundreds of thousands of dollars."

Stephens, a candidate for the U.S. Senate in Virginia, also said the Clinton administration "bought a substantial amount of time" by replacing Stephens and other Republican appointees. He noted that the shake-up took place while Rostenkowski was "performing a critical function for the administration with regard to the budget and tax bills."

Daley, as a former state's attorney and one of Rostenkowski's closest political allies, said he was incensed by Stephens' comments. The mayor said Stephens should be stripped of his license to practice law but that the legal profession is incapable of policing itself.

"It's a violation of the canons of ethics," Daley said. "It's really improper for the former U.S. attorney, who has taken confidential information to a grand jury, to come forward and release this.

"Whatever they're going to do, that grand jury will do. But I think it's very improper that anybody would say that. You could have an investigation that went nowhere, and you could then later on get out there and start writing a book or start talking about people."

Stephens' comments were tantamount to "a religious leader talking to somebody about their problems in confidence, then going out publicly and talking about that person," Daley said.

But Stephens is unlikely to be disciplined, Daley said, because "the only license you never lose is a law license. Store owners can lose their licenses. A police officer can lose his license. But very, very few lawyers ever lose their license because you have a judge judging you who has his license."

Asked whether the legal profession polices itself, Daley said, "No, it doesn't. Everybody knows that."

House post office debate turns ugly

WASHINGTON—After an angry and emotional debate in which the speaker of the House was all but accused of manipulating a federal prosecutor, House Democrats on Thursday rejected a Republican effort to open records of the House post office investigation to public scrutiny.

The federal investigation of wrongdoing at the post office earlier this week indicated that Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.), the powerful chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, may have profited from a misuse of funds, possibly as much as $100,000.

Republicans, seeing that this Democrat so crucial to President Clinton's economic program was at the center of controversy, had demanded Wednesday that records of the special House task force that conducted an inquiry into the scandal before federal prosecutors became involved be made public.

During the bitter debate Thursday, Republicans accused Democrats of a "cover-up" because they argued against public release of the information.

Democrats countered by saying that the investigation into Rostenkowski and others would be jeopardized if the documents were made public, an argument advanced by the interim U.S. attorney, J. Ramsey Johnson, in a letter to House leaders Wednesday.

And in an unprecedented breach of House comity, Speaker Thomas Foley (D-Wash.) was practically accused of manipulating the prosecutor into taking the Democrats' side. Foley faced down his accuser, Rep. William Thomas (R-Calif.), and received an apology.

Under the resolution approved 244-183, the speaker will ask Johnson to advise the House when the documents can be released; then the House will take a vote on whether to make them public. One Republican, 242 Democrats and one independent voted to keep the records closed; 11 Democrats and 172 Republicans were opposed.

That set the tenor of the debate.

The House "won't 'fess up to its dirty little secrets," charged Rep. Scott Klug (R-Wis.). But House Majority Whip David Bonior (D-Mich.) countered that the House should "stand here and affirm our principles of law, order, justice and decency."

Meanwhile, Rostenkowski went about his other business Thursday, holding meetings throughout the day on the economic plan.

Pausing to chat with reporters outside the committee room door where he was holding the meetings, Rostenkowski discussed the progress the committee members were making. But when he was asked how the investigation was affecting his budgetary work, he did not answer and gently pushed away a reporter's tape recorder.

"Public disclosure will thwart the ability of the prosecutor to collect information," said House Majority Leader Richard Gephardt (D-Mo.). "It would possibly impair the U.S. attorney from completing his investigation."

But Republicans insisted that public disclosure of all of the investigatory documents would do nothing more than shed light on the issue. In fact, Thomas, who was a member of the task force that looked into the post office case last year, insisted that there was nothing in them that would damage the case against anyone.

In a loud, emotional speech on the House floor, Thomas accused Foley of having a phone conversation with Atty. Gen. Janet Reno prior to receiving the letter from Johnson asking that the documents be kept secret.

That brought Gephardt to his feet, challenging Thomas' statement. Thomas shouted that Foley should be brought to the floor immediately to reply. Seconds later, Foley strode onto the floor and angrily denied he had ever had a conversation with Reno.

"That is totally and absolutely incorrect," a grim Foley said. "I am surprised that the normal courtesy that exists between members would not have been shown in this case."

Pointing his finger at Thomas, Foley said that not one question had been asked of him until the accusation was made on the floor. At the end of his remarks, Thomas apologized and admitted he "had no factual evidence" that the call had taken place.

Rostenkowski voted with the other Democrats to delay release of the investigatory documents. In addition to Rostenkowski, court documents indicated that former Rep. Joseph Kolter (D-Pa.) may have been among those receiving money.

A year ago, a House task force on the post office report found nothing to suggest that House members had engaged in embezzlement, although it criticized the conduct of post office employees.

In his guilty plea released Monday, former House Postmaster Robert Rota admitted he lied to House investigators, The Associated Press reported, quoting from one of the unreleased documents.

Daley criticizes attorney over Rosty flap

Chicago Mayor Richard Daley on Thursday criticized former U.S. attorney Jay B. Stephens for revealing information about the case against U.S. Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) and indicating he might be indicted.

"You can't do that. Revealing information is a violation of ethics. I think it's unfair. It's not right. It's improper for any attorney to release information gathered by a grand jury," Daley said. "That's like a religious leader going out and talking about what a person has told him (in confidence)."

Daley said he hoped Congress would spend more time working on President Clinton's economic stimulus package instead of the allegations against Rostenkowski.

"There's been a lot of allegations and a lot of talk, but this has been going on for a year," Daley said. "The allegations are a serious problem, but we need an economic stimulus package."

Don't Rush to Judgment on Rostenkowski

Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) is on the ropes.

Some are celebrating, including his most recently defeated congressional rivals Elias "Nonincumbent" Zenkich and former Ald. Dick Simpson. Both are calling for Rosty's resignation. Their gloating is unseemly.

Others are more careful in making judgments. Rostenkowski, who is the subject of a federal probe of the House Post Office, hasn't been accused of anything. He has made mistakes. But he's also entitled to fairness.

If Rostenkowski has shortcomings, it should be noted that Rostenkowski has also had some notable accomplishments and did a great deal of good in a political career that began in the 1950s.

As chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, he has been an important legislator. Rostenkowski wrote the tax reform act of 1986, the bipartisan Social Security Act of 1983, and the Trade Expansion Act of 1988 that created jobs and economic growth. He's President Clinton's top congressional ally.

For all of his power and influence in the nation's Capitol, Rostenkowski never caught Potomac fever. Since his election to Congress in 1958, he has never owned a house in Washington, D.C., and has seldom spent a weekend inside the Beltway. It's no accident that his favorite Washington, D.C., restaurant is Morton's of Chicago.

Other legislators don't always remember where they came from. Some friends of mine dropped by their U.S. senator's office and were told that the senator was an international figure and couldn't be bothered with constituents. Rostenkowski will ask Chicago visitors how long they're in town and insists that they join him for dinner, whether he's dining with the chairman of General Motors, a network anchorman, or pals from the Northwest Side.

His neighborhood roots are deep. Rostenkowski lives in the house that his grandfather built and where he grew up. He wears a four-leaf clover around his neck with the names of his wife, their daughters and their birthdays. My most enduring image of Rostenkowski was when I interviewed him in the middle 1980s as he was headed for a hospital to find out whether he could give one of his kidneys to one of his daughters.

In his neighborhood, Rostenkowski is the largest contributor to the restoration of the historic St. Stanislaus Kostka Church. He also sponsors a football team and a polka band. Rostenkowski gives generously to Maryville Academy, the state's largest home for troubled kids.

He could have pocketed $1 million in campaign funds if he had retired last year. But he stayed on and won a tough race for re-election.

Loyalty matters to Rostenkowski. He was once reprimanded by a judge for paying a constituent's parking ticket with his political fund. More recently, he has paid the legal expenses of two aides with his campaign fund.

When friends have setbacks, he is among the first to call. After former Mayor Michael Bilandic's 1979 defeat, Rosty engineered mayoral chief of staff Tom Donovan's selection as president of the Chicago Board of Trade. When Mayor Jane Byrne was defeated in 1983, Rostenkowski found business for her aide Bill Griffin. Rosty made Loop lawyer Bill Daley's career after his brother Rich Daley finished third in the 1983 mayoral primary. When a newspaper colleague got bumped from the congressional beat, Rostenkowski was the first person to offer him a job. Some people would call him a stand-up guy.

Staunch Defender of Perks And Patronage Is Focus Of Post Office Scandal

One of the Last of His Kind

WASHINGTON—In the summer of 1989, Dan Rostenkowski was in all his glory. Lobbyists and corporate chieftains happily anted up $25,000 each to underwrite a lavish bicentennial celebration of his House Ways and Means Committee. There were gold souvenir cuff links and a glitzy documentary movie, starring the chairman, of course.

Four years later, federal prosecutors paint a different picture of the period.

Instead of the expansive tax-writer, Rep. Rostenkowski is portrayed as a chiseling patronage chief who allegedly pressured House employees to carry out a series of cash-for-stamps transactions valued at thousands of dollars a year. Though never identified by name, court documents filed this week in Washington are a road map pointing to the chairman as an anonymous "Congressman A," who allegedly swapped a postal voucher for $2,000 in cash just weeks before the Ways and Means bash.

Denies Wrongdoing

The allegations have yet to be proved, and Mr. Rostenkowski has denied any wrongdoing. Still, they pose a cruel riddle. Why would one of the most powerful men of the House, with legal access to more than a million dollars in campaign funds and special-interest money, risk his career by exchanging postage stamps for relatively small amounts of cash?

Part of the answer surely lies in the entrenched culture of the House. A master of the legislative deal, Mr. Rostenkowski has also lorded over another side of Congress — a world of cloakroom politics and patronage operatives who once ran the Capitol's daily operations and were a source of power through jobs and favors.

"He is part of the old school that believed in patronage, that believed in staff, that believed in the institution," says Ed Jenkins, a friend and former Georgia congressman and member of the Ways and Means panel. "That has good aspects and bad aspects."

Chairman Rostenkowski is also someone who has staunchly defended the perks of office, which, along with the old patronage system, were readily accepted by the old school but have been attacked by reformers and recently diluted. The tab for his steak dinners at Morton's of Chicago—with its own Rostenkowski wine bin — was often picked up by lobbyists. He maintained his own personal political-action committee and regularly kept the maximum permitted in honorariums. At the time he allegedly was plotting with former House Postmaster Robert Rota, the Chicago Democrat was well on his way toward amassing a $1 million campaign treasury, which he could have kept had he retired from Congress at the end of last term.

Yet, during the period of most of the alleged cash-for-stamps transactions, lawmakers, including Mr. Rostenkowski, also chafed under caps on their pay and outside income. According to court documents filed as part of Mr. Rota's plea bargain, even while enjoying the lofty symbols of his power, Mr. Rostenkowski may have been engaging in a decadelong scheme to embezzle from the House post office. Mr. Rota, 66 years old, a onetime Rostenkowski ally who pleaded guilty to misdemeanor embezzlement charges Monday, is said to have agreed to provide the chairman with cash for stamps only after pressure from the congressman, who also had pushed to install a patronage worker who allegedly handled the transactions.

Dan Rostenkowski

"Mr. Rota explained to [the new supervisor] that they would give cash to Congressman A. . . . because Congressman A took care of them and they should take care of Congressman A in return," according to the prosecutors' summary of the case. More than anyone on Capitol Hill, Mr. Rostenkowski, a protege of the late Mayor Richard Daley of Chicago, would appreciate the simple axiom of patronage set out in the Rota plea.

Yet none of the evidence made public by prosecutors so far shows that Mr. Rostenkowski benefited personally from the alleged cash transactions—which could have served only to generate money for other office expenses — a point that could be crucial in determining the seriousness of the case against him. In years past, some members adopted the practice of cashing-out stamp purchases, although it was disallowed in the late-1970s.

Moreover, a comparison of House records with the postage vouchers listed in the Rota charges shows that Mr. Rostenkowski's office continued to report large stamp purchases during a period when the alleged conspiracy was discontinued by the postmaster. This suggests that he may have been purchasing large quantities of stamps all along, rather than turning stamp vouchers into cash.

Mr. Rota, who currently is facing a maximum three years in prison and $300,000 in fines, claims in court documents that there was a two-year hiatus in the plot from mid-1987 to the summer of 1989 when the post office's longtime supervisor of accounts was replaced by an employee whom the postmaster didn't trust. House records confirm there was a change of personnel during the period, but Mr. Rostenkowski's office continued to report stamp purchases, albeit at a sometimes slower pace.

For example in 1985 and 1986, when the alleged cash-for-stamps transactions were taking place, Mr. Rostenkowski's office reported total stamp purchases averaging $4,100 a year. In 1987, the volume dropped off to about $3,000—including a single large purchase before the change of supervisors. But in 1988, when Mr. Rota is said to have cut off all cash-for-stamps transactions, Mr. Rostenkowski's office reported stamp purchases totaling $4,900.

Bracing the House

It is uncertain whether the inquiry will touch other lawmakers; besides Rep. Rostenkowski, Mr. Rota also implicated former Pennsylvania Rep. Joe Kolter. The Democrat has denied wrongdoing.

According to prosecutors, Mr. Rota on some occasions provided large numbers of stamps to members of Congress and later exchanged the stamps for cash, and at other times allegedly simply gave cash directly in exchange for standard office vouchers—available to all members—falsely made out for postage.

The allegations may be difficult to prove. Still, for the chairman — and for the House he has served for more than 30 years — the immediate fallout can only be bad. After going as far as it did in the court filings, the prosecution team could find it difficult to back away from bringing charges. The post office allegations are part of a wider government investigation focusing on Mr. Rostenkowski's personal finances and campaign and office expenditures in Chicago as well.

Mr. Rostenkowski's camp is preparing for the worst. Any indictment, however small, would force him to surrender his chairmanship to his old irritant and the ranking Democrat, Florida Rep. Sam Gibbons. For the White House, the charges come at the worst possible time: President Clinton is depending on the chairman to champion his economic package and sweeping health-care overhaul.

The timing of the Rota plea also bedevils congressional Democrats, who have made wholesale changes in the administration of the House, dismantled the scandal-ridden House bank and professionalized the operations of the post office, but can't seem to break through the public's perception of relentless scandal.

"The last reported incident . . . is April 1991," says Speaker Thomas Foley. "All of that has changed."

A judge's son, Mr. Foley has a more elite, academic image that is the very opposite of Mr. Rostenkowski's street-tough swagger, but there is a palpable sadness about both men and about the House, as well. When Speaker James Wright fell amid an ethics scandal in 1989, he was hurt by the mood of animosity among rank-and-file members. Mr. Rostenkowski's arrogance has earned him enemies as well. But in Washington, a city that longs for leadership, his big-fisted style is viewed among colleagues as a healthy supplement to the more refined Mr. Foley and his younger majority leader, Richard Gephardt.

"Innuendo and supposition are replacing even accusation," Mr. Foley said yesterday, rebuking those who have called for Mr. Rostenkowski to step aside from his chairmanship even before an indictment. And as the tax-writer closeted himself with budget negotiators, the House floor broke into partisan fighting over when to release still-secret testimony from a task-force investigation of the post office. Finally, on a 244-183 vote, the chamber pledged to publicize the material but delayed its release until prosecutors, who fear it will hurt their inquiry, lift their objections.

Test of Strength

The case, which has been proceeding for 16 months, was first a battle of wills between congressional Democrats and a Republican prosecutor, Jay Stephens. But with Mr. Stephens gone — he is seeking the GOP Senate nomination in Virginia — and the Clinton administration in command of the Justice Department, the case is now a different test of strength. It matches Mr. Rostenkowski against old patronage allies and a reform mentality he has resisted as demeaning.

After three decades in Congress, the 65-year-old Mr. Rostenkowski is one of the last of a generation of Northern urban Democrats who once dominated the House with their rural Southern counterparts. The late Hale Boggs, a Louisiana majority leader, was his early patron.

Matched against his strongman image is a growing isolation that has come with age and changes in the House itself. As a product of Chicago ward politics (Mr. Rostenkowski's father was a prominent Democratic politician), Mr. Rostenkowski has his own ethics code and was never part of the reform movement of the mid-1970s.

What drives Mr. Rostenkowski most is a desire for control. He is faulted now for renting office space in a building owned by his sister, yet this fits the tradition of a man who still lives in the townhouse he inherited from his father. Patronage is part of the same pattern. Long after giving up any hope of becoming House speaker, the chairman remained a force in the cloakroom world of House officers who commanded duchies of their own in the Capitol and prospered by smoothing the lives of members by overseeing check-cashing and other personal services.

Elected each Congress by the Democratic caucus and then the full House, these officers are politicians with their own turf. But with the advent of a new professional postmaster and a former Army general as the House's professional administrator, the lines of authority and patronage atmosphere have been radically altered in the past year. Still, Republicans complain that changes haven't come fast enough. "The Democratic patronage system is still in place," complains Rep. Pat Roberts of Kansas, who last year served on a task force that investigated improprieties at the post office.

The most painful aspect of any eventual case against him would be the testimony of the very people whose careers Rep. Rostenkowski helped preserve and protect, including Mr. Rota and James C. Smith. Mr. Smith supervised the cash distribution at the post office and his office contained "cash and stamps everywhere," according to Daniel Swillinger, a lawyer who worked on an earlier House inquiry into the matter. When the bipartisan task force conducted its own investigation last year of financial irregularities after large amounts of missing cash had been detected in a spot audit, both men denied providing cash to lawmakers. Now Mr. Rota has agreed to cooperate with the grand jury in return for leniency, while Mr. Smith has been granted immunity from prosecution.

For Mr. Rostenkowski, the investigation has forced changes. Witness the House Democrats' annual retreat earlier this year. The old Dan Rostenkowski — the proud powerbroker — never attended the annual function of mere rank-and-file members. This year he not only attended the event at Baltimore's Johns Hopkins University, but he tried hard to be liked. He wore casual attire and mingled. At the close of the evening, he joined a conga line, which concluded when he stood on a chair in the middle of the dance floor and waved his arms in rhythm with the music.

While he still takes the 5 a.m. flight out of O'Hare on Tuesday morning and works long days, the probe has sapped some of his energy. During a recent session with a lobbyist of long acquaintance, he dozed off twice. One night he turned to a former colleague and confessed in an anguished tone, "They've subpoenaed my children." A few weeks ago, all four of his daughters appeared before the grand jury. "That just killed him," says former Rep. Tom Downey, a New Yorker who once served on the Ways and Means panel.

Recently, he attended a series of small fund-raising dinners thrown by former staffers and a broad circle of lobbyist friends. He talks about the presidency, the tax bill, Congress, not about his travails. But most of the people who contributed $5,000 to attend know that the money may go not to his re-election drive — there is speculation that he won't run again — but to help pay for his legal defense. His legal fees are well into six figures.

Even while mired in the post office probe, the chairman's admirers stress that he is still one of the most effective legislators. President Clinton went out of his way to praise the chairman this week, mindful of his potentially crucial role in the budget and health-care debates.

"He has extraordinary accomplishments that are historic and enduring and that can't be taken away from him," says former Democratic Rep. Downey.

Clout got Rostenkowski's kids CBOT job

By William B. Crawford Jr.
TRIBUNE STAFF WRITER

Two daughters of Rep. Dan Rostenkowski have collected about $200,000 in wages and bonuses from the Chicago Board of Trade since the early 1980s, according to payroll records and exchange officials. How much work they did for that money is a matter of dispute.

During much of this period, the daughters also were employed as airline flight attendants, and insiders at the Board of Trade allege that they seldom reported for work at the futures exchange.

The Washington grand jury conducting an investigation into their father's dealings has questioned both women about their jobs at the CBOT, sources in the capital said.

The two daughters, who have been carried on the CBOT's employment roster as Dawn and Stacy Rosten, were hired by exchange President Thomas R. Donovan. Sources at the exchange said he did so at the request of Rostenkowski, who was responsible for getting Donovan his first job at the CBOT, as exchange secretary, in 1979.

Donovan, the former patronage chief for the late Mayor Richard J. Daley, said he hired the women without intervention from their father and denied that they ever were paid for not working. Dawn declined to comment, and Stacy could not be reached for comment.

Further, Donovan noted, he regularly hires sons, daughters, brothers, cousins and other relatives of powerful and not-so-powerful political figures at the city, state and federal levels, as part-time summer help or as full-time staff. He said the hires include relatives of former Chicago aldermen Thomas Keane and Edward R. Vrdolyak; current aldermen Bernie Stone and Richard Mell; former U.S. Rep. Martin Russo (D-Ill.); former Cook County Commissioner Matt Biesczat, and Cook County Assessor Thomas Hynes.

'It's not at all uncommon for me to hire relatives, children of alderman or other elected officials.'
Thomas R. Donovan, Chicago Board of Trade

"It's not at all uncommon for me to hire relatives, children of alderman or other elected officials," said Donovan. "Usually they are children, looking for part-time summer work to help with college."

Stacy, 32, and Dawn, 41, testified before the Washington grand jury under grants of immunity, in separate appearances, that they worked diligently at the exchange. With immunity, witnesses can be prosecuted only for perjury, if they give false testimony. A third daughter, Gayle, 31, also testified.

Rostenkowski, 65, chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, continues to be dogged by a 16-month federal investigation that apparently has grown well beyond the congressman's alleged dealings with the House post office.

Sources in Washington said Friday that investigators had shifted focus from Rostenkowski's alleged swap of a postal voucher for $2,000 to his use of a Northwest Side congressional office and his influence at the CBOT.

Reached for comment, a spokesman for Rostenkowski said, "It is the congressman's understanding that one of the daughters has not worked at the Board of Trade for some time."

vouchers or for postage stamps obtained with vouchers.

The charges against Rota list 12 separate instances in which "Congressman A"—whom sources have identified as Rostenkowski—exchanged stamps or vouchers for cash from 1985 to 1987 and from 1989 to 1991.

Smith had worked at the post office since 1960 and was promoted in the spring of 1989 to office supervisor of accounts. Rostenkowski had a hand in the promotion.

Smith's predecessor in the job of controlling the cash in the post office had been Paul Tomme, an attorney who now lives in Texas. Rota admitted this week when he pleaded guilty to embezzlement of post office funds that he did not trust Tomme. The cash arrangement had been interrupted during Tomme's brief tenure, court records indicate.

When Tomme moved on, Rostenkowski made a strong push for Smith to get the job, according to Smith and the legal papers in Rota's court case. The way Assistant U.S. Attorney Thomas J. Motley put it, Smith got the job "with the personal intervention and insistence" of "Congressman A."

Robert V. Rota

Smith felt a sense of loyalty to Rostenkowski that he said played into his thinking on that first occasion when he said Rota approached him for cash for the Chicago congressman. "He was my [illegible]n, my sponsor. Rota was my [illegible] So here I had my patron and [illegible]oss saying to do this. Rostenk[illegible]ki is a hard man to turn [illegible]. Even his colleagues are [illegible] of him. [Former] Congress[man Thomas J.] Downey has referred to him as a 500-pound gorilla."

So, as Smith put it, "I did what I thought I had to do."

Smith said that, so far as he knows, the money he provided for Rostenkowski was given directly to the congressman. "I never handed Rostenkowski any money directly," Smith said. "It was all done through Rota."

Smith says he was brought under Rostenkowski's wing by the congressman's longtime Capitol Hill office manager, Virginia C. Fletcher. Rota warned him during that first meeting in the basement of the Longworth House Office Building not to talk with Fletcher about the cash for Rostenkowski. Smith said Rota added, "You know, he [Rostenkowski] is very touchy about his private business."

Fletcher also has been subpoenaed under an immunity grant to testify to the grand jury investigating Rostenkowski, but Smith said, "Virginia is totally innocent."

Smith said Rostenkowski was the chief beneficiary of the arrangement but Rota provided cash for other congressmen.

Former Rep. Joseph Kolter (D-Pa.) has been mentioned in court documents. His congressional expense records were subpoenaed along with Rostenkowski's in May 1992. But from what Smith said he witnessed, "Kolter was much less involved in this."

Rostenkowski has not been charged with any crime in the post office case. The jury investigation is continuing, also focusing on Rostenkowski's personal and campaign finances.

Attorneys for Rostenkowski and Rota did not return calls.

Smith said he goes back [illegible] forth in his feelings toward [illegible] tenkowski. "I feel sorry for [illegible] It's a terrible thing to fall [illegible] such a high place," he said.

"It's not like this is an evil [illegible] we're dealing with here," Sm[illegible] said. "He gives thousands of dollars to charities. He's a good congressman."

Smith has been under pressure himself during the investigation, especially after newspapers identified him as a witness cooperating with prosecutors.

"I was sorry about the whole thing. It is very painful for everybody," said Smith. "I wish it hadn't happened."

Packwood (R-Ore.) confers with Rep. Dan Ros (D-Ill.) at a meeting of House and Senate negotiators reconcile differences in their versions of budget legislation.

JAMES C. SMITH

James C. Smith was raised in Atlanta and went north to Washington to go to college. He landed his first job on Capitol Hill in 1959, working for then-Rep. James C Davis (D-Ga.).

Smith's first job with the House post office in 1960 was as a mail carrier to offices in the Cannon House Office Building. Under the patronage system on Capitol Hill, he was kept on by a series of sponsors as the representatives he worked for came and went.

When House Speaker John W. McCormick (D-Mass.) retired in 1970—the same year federal prosecutors in Washington pursued allegations of influence peddling in the speaker's office—Smith heard about a patronage opening in the office of Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.). He apparently impressed Rostenkowski's top aide and, without meeting the congressman, he secured the post office post that he kept for the next two decades.

Smith retired in April. He still lives in an apartment on Capitol Hill.

Rostenkowski received cash, ex-House postal worker says

FROM COMBINED DISPATCHES

CHICAGO — A retired House post office employee says he was given a $2,000 expense account voucher for postage stamps in the summer of 1989, which was turned in for cash for Rep. Dan Rostenkowski by the House postmaster, the Chicago Sun-Times reported yesterday.

James C. Smith, who retired this spring from the post office, where he was promoted to office supervisor of accounts in the spring of 1989, said he questioned House Postmaster Robert V. Rota at the time about giving cash and not stamps for the voucher.

In a copyrighted report, the Sun-Times said that Mr. Rota replied: "Look, he [Rostenkowski] is our friend. He takes care of you. He takes care of me. And this is the way he wants us to do it for him."

Mr. Rostenkowski, Illinois Democrat, has not been charged with any crime in the post office case and has denied any wrongdoing. He is chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee and a principal in negotiations over President Clinton's five-year, $500 billion budget plan.

Mr. Rota pleaded guilty Monday to three misdemeanor charges in a scheme to funnel cash to members of Congress. In the documents released as part of his plea bargain, Mr. Rota spelled out how he arranged for two members of Congress to embezzle thousands of dollars in taxpayer money.

The congressmen were not named, but the court papers contain detailed records of transactions that match certain entries in public records submitted by Mr. Rostenkowski for his own transactions between 1985 and 1991. The other congressman implicated appeared to be former Rep. Joe Kolter, Pennsylvania Democrat.

The cash arrangement reportedly was interrupted when Paul Tomme, Mr. Smith's predecessor in the job of controlling the cash, had the job. After Mr. Tomme, a lawyer who now lives in Texas, moved on, Mr. Rostenkowski made a strong push for Mr. Smith to get the job, according to Mr. Smith and legal papers in Mr. Rota's court case.

Mr. Smith, a Georgia native, was called to testify earlier this year under a grant of immunity before the federal grand jury investigating post office embezzlement, the newspaper reported.

Mr. Smith told the Sun-Times that as far as he knows the money he provided for Mr. Rostenkowski was given directly to the congressman. "I never handed Rostenkowski any money directly," he said. "It was all done through Rota."

He said Mr. Rostenkowski was the chief beneficiary of the cash-for-voucher arrangement but that Mr. Rota provided cash for other congressmen.

Prosecutors said Mr. Rota and the congressmen defrauded taxpayers of $30,600 since 1985. The scheme began shortly after Mr. Rota became postmaster in 1972 and continued through a 1979 cover-up and the use of patronage appointments.

Under House Democratic Caucus rules, should Mr. Rostenkowski be indicted for a felony, he would be forced to step down as chairman of the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. Rostenkowski, Mr. Kolter and another congressman — Rep. Austin Murphy, Pennsylvania Democrat — had been served subpoenas in connection with the federal probe. They have denied any wrongdoing and have invoked their Fifth Amendment rights against testifying before the federal grand jury.

U.S. Attorney J. Ramsey Johnson told reporters that Mr. Rota's decision to plead guilty and to cooperate "is a significant step forward" in the federal criminal probe.

So far, seven former House post office employees and a former Capitol Hill administrative assistant have been convicted on a variety of federal charges ranging from drug dealing to embezzlement to obstruction of justice. Former chiefs of staff for Mr. Kolter and Mr. Rota already have been convicted.

Many Files Are Said to Be Missing in Probe of House Post Office

By Eric Pianin
Washington Post Staff Writer

A federal prosecutor has informed House officials that there are numerous files missing from the House Post Office records that were provided to a grand jury investigating allegations of embezzlement and other wrongdoing.

Interim U.S. Attorney J. Ramsey Johnson, who notified House Administration Committee Chairman Charlie Rose (D-N.C.) of the problem in a letter dated Tuesday, said that "broad categories of files are unaccounted for," including some of the correspondence files of former House postmaster Robert V. Rota.

Rota pleaded guilty this week to misdemeanor charges. Court papers filed in the case showed that he helped two lawmakers embezzle tens of thousands of dollars. Although the two members were identified only as "Congressman A" and "Congressman B," court documents and House records point to Ways and Means Committee Chairman Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) and former representative Joe P. Kolter (D-Pa.).

A retired House post office employee, James C. Smith, said he was given a $2,000 expense account voucher for postage stamps in the summer of 1989 that Rota turned in for cash for Rostenkowski, the Chicago Sun-Times reported yesterday.

Smith, who retired last spring and who testified before the grand jury under a grant of immunity from prosecution, told the Sun-Times that he questioned Rota at the time about giving cash and not stamps for the voucher.

According to the newspaper account, Rota replied: "Look, he [Rostenkowski] is our friend. He takes care of you. He takes care of me. And this is the way he wants us to do it for him."

Smith told the newspaper: "I never handed Rostenkowski any money directly" and that "It was all done through Rota."

Johnson's letter was received yesterday, a day after the House voted 244 to 183 to honor another of the prosecutor's requests to put off consideration of making public the documents and transcripts from a 1992 internal House task force review of the Post Office because opening the files might adversely affect the grand jury investigation.

House Republicans demanded the release of those documents, saying it was necessary to remove a "cloud" of suspicion over other House members. However, the Democrats disagreed and accused the Republicans of attempting to play politics with the case.

Last Aug. 7, Rose transmitted a copy of the task force report to the U.S. attorney's office and invited the prosecutors to inspect all task force records. After a review of those files, the prosecutors obtained copies of various categories of documents. Last fall, the prosecutors requested copies of all the remaining documents held by the task force, and they received the bulk of those in mid-November.

In early March, the U.S. attorney asked then-House Counsel Steve Ross for access to all documents remaining in the House Post Office that had never been collected by the task force. After repeated requests to Ross for access to those remaining files, the prosecutors gained access to them in May.

"Following that review, we concluded that many House Post Office files are unaccounted for," Johnson said in the letter to Rose. "That is, there are broad categories of files (such as Mr. Rota's correspondence files from later years) that were not included in either the task force materials or the existing House Post Office files."

Ross said yesterday that Johnson's office had not asked him for access to Rota's correspondence, and he said he was puzzled by the letter. "I don't know how to respond because I don't know what documents they say are not accounted for," said Ross, who left the House in May for private practice.

Rose said in an interview that Democratic- and Republican-employed investigators jointly reviewed boxes of materials at the post office as part of last year's internal investigation but took only those materials that seemed relevant to the probe.

Staff writer Michael York contributed to this report.

Rosty Feels He's Worth More Than He's Paid

WASHINGTON—For a long time, Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) has thought he was worth more than he makes. And he has not been shy about saying so.

The veteran Chicago congressman made no bones about how underpaid he thought was when he introduced a bill in 1988 that would have let members of Congress sign up for salaries on a sliding scale.

He was was worth every penny of the $135,000-a-year he would have made at top end of the pay scale, he said. Incoming congressmen or others who thought less of themselves and their legislative skills could have started at the bottom of the pay range, which Rostenkowski would have set at $89,500.

"I would personally sign in at the highest end of the scale," Rostenkowski said in a speech to colleagues, who often cower at voting for far more modest pay raises for themselves.

Veterans are worth more than rookie congressmen to their constituents, argued Rostenkowski, who was first sent to Washington in 1958 by Chicago voters who have been loyal to him ever since.

The Rostenkowski pay plan never was paid any serious attention.

The Washington Post was blunt in an editorial: "The idea is preposterous," it said at the time.

Rostenkowski once admitted that, after he made the proposal, his mail was "running a little hostile."

But he defended the idea as a more honest and less hypocritical way for members to remunerate themselves.

"In being shy about declaring our worth in an honest way, all we do is demean our office and reinforce the public misimpressions about public service," Rostenkowski said.

Although he said he had no illusions that the plan would ever pass, he explained he was "attracted to it because it represents a giant step toward the honesty and pride so sorely missing from the way we do things now. Let's be honest with the American people and with ourselves."

While Rostenkowski's pay plan never passed, there have been raises since then. The base salary of a member of Congress now is $133,644.

Spending For Cars, Rents Also Targeted

Federal investigators are questioning transactions involving more than $600,000 in taxpayer money or campaign funds that may have been used to improperly benefit Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) or his family.

A Chicago Sun-Times compilation of the leads that federal prosecutors are known to be pursuing against Rostenkowski shows much more is at issue than the $21,300 in cash he is alleged to have received illegally from House Postmaster Robert V. Rota.

No charges have been filed against Rostenkowski. Even if he eventually is charged, it is unlikely the total dollar amount involved in any accusations against him would total $600,000—either because investigators find no evidence of a crime or determine that the transactions are too old.

But the figure helps answer a question that's been asked a lot since prosecutors revealed some of the details of the alleged scheme between Rostenkowski and Rota when the former postmaster pleaded guilty last week:

Why would a guy like Dan Rostenkowski—one of the most powerful men in Congress—risk so much for so little money?

Rostenkowski has reported obtaining $76,843 worth of stamps from the House post office since 1978—$51,843 with his government expense allowance and another $25,000 with campaign funds.

In court documents filed last week, prosecutors allege that, for at least that long, Rota had been allowing Rostenkowski and other congressmen to embezzle cash through transactions disguised as stamp purchases.

So far, the government has itemized just 12 allegedly illicit transactions totaling $21,300 involving Rota and an unnamed Congressman A, whom sources have identified as Rostenkowski. But court records indicate Rota has provided additional information about other incidents involving Rostenkowski.

Prosecutors contend Rostenkowski and other congressmen improperly cashed in at the post office in three different ways:

- Receiving money for official congressional vouchers, which falsely stated the congressmen had received stamps.
- Exchanging actual stamps, previously obtained with official vouchers, for cash.
- Cashing checks drawn on political fund accounts, which also were recorded to look like stamp purchases.

During the 15-year period highlighted in the government's case against Rota, Rostenkowski reported using taxpayer funds to make 41 large stamp purchases of $500 or more. The largest single purchase was for $3,000.

Such large stamp purchases are unusual, because congressmen are allowed to send nearly all of their official mail free and have little need for stamps.

All of Rostenkowski's $25,000 in campaign fund spending for House post office stamps came between 1988 and 1990. His political funds reported spending an additional $7,000 on stamps in Washington during that time, but his campaign disclosures do not specify that they were purchased at the House post office. These totals also do not include amounts that Rostenkowski's political funds paid for postage in Chicago.

Curiously, Rostenkowski's second-largest annual total for stamp buying was $10,500 in 1988, during a period in which prosecutors have alleged that he and Rota were forced to put their scheme on hold. According to the government, Rota discontinued the cash-for-stamps deals from mid-1987 to mid-1989 after an accomplice, the post office's supervisor of accounts, was replaced by an employee Rota didn't trust.

In addition to the 12 illegal transactions itemized in the case against Rota, however, prosecutors allege the former postmaster "twice delivered two other large sums of cash to Congressman A" in the summer of 1989 in exchange for stamps.

This raises a question of whether Rostenkowski stockpiled stamps during the two-year hiatus and converted them to cash later, when Rota promoted a patronage employee of Rostenkowski to the supervisor of accounts position.

Investigators are examining automobile deals involving Rostenkowski and a Wilmette auto dealership that involved the expenditure of $141,440 in taxpayer and campaign funds.

This line of inquiry followed a Jan. 24 report in the Sun-Times that Rostenkowski improperly had used his congressional expense allowance to obtain personal ownership of two passenger vans and a station wagon.

Rostenkowski charged taxpayers $73,000 to lease "mobile offices" from Wil-Shore Motor Sales Inc., Wilmette, between 1987 and 1992. Unlike a standard lease, the cars were titled in his name as soon as he began making payments. He stopped the lease payments after the Sun-Times' inquiries.

Also under scrutiny are $68,440 in payments to Wil-Shore between 1975 and 1988 by Rostenkowski's political campaign committee, Rostenkowski for Congress.

Federal prosecutors have sought details about all of Rostenkowski's transactions with Wil-Shore dating back to 1975, grand jury witnesses have told the Sun-Times. Rostenkowski and family members took title to numerous automobiles from Wil-Shore during that period, state records show.

In addition to probing his acquisition of the government-leased vehicles, the grand jury is trying to determine if taxpayer or campaign funds were used to pay for any of the Rostenkowski family's other cars, sources have told the Sun-Times.

Rostenkowski billed taxpayers $1,050 a month for his "mobile offices," which he leased for two years each. They were, in succession, a customized 1987 Ford Econoline van, 1989 Ford Aerostar minivan and 1991 Ford Taurus wagon.

Rostenkowski's $1,050 monthly lease payment exceeded the customary cost for the types of vehicles he was leasing.

After the lease periods ended, Rostenkowski retained ownership of the Econoline and the Aerostar. He returned the Taurus to Wil-Shore when questioned by the Sun-Times about the lease arrangements. Illinois secretary of state records indicate Rostenkowski still holds title to all three vehicles.

The Sun-Times also has reported Rostenkowski's campaign committee paid more than $24,822 for auto insurance since 1989, even though records showed it neither owned nor was leasing any cars. It is not known, however, whether investigators are pursuing this angle.

CAMPAIGN OFFICE $73,000

The grand jury has investigated an arrangement under which Rostenkowski has paid more than $73,000 in campaign funds to himself and his sisters since 1986 to rent an unmarked, little-used campaign office.

Under the leasing deal, exposed by the Sun-Times on Dec. 13, Rostenkowski has been paying $1,250 a month for an office listed in campaign records at 1347-49 N. Noble in a family owned apartment building adjacent to his home.

The ground-floor storefront space at 1347-49 N. Noble, which has no exterior sign, contains a storage area with campaign memorabilia and what Rostenkowski calls a reception room.

Following the Sun-Times' report, Rostenkowski led some reporters on a tour of the location and showed them a personal office that actually is located in his home at 1372 W. Evergreen, through a passage from the Noble Street building.

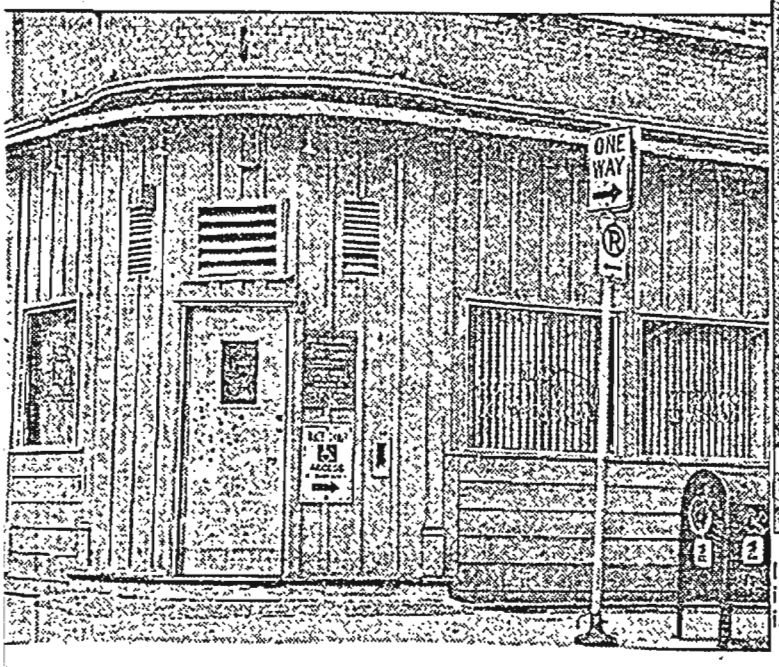
An aspect of the office lease that has caught investigators' attention is the fact that Rostenkowski obscured his interest in the rental payments on public disclosure documents. His campaign reports listed the campaign rent as being paid to the "Noble Building Account," while his personal economic disclosure statements reported only that he was receiving income from unspecified sources for rental property at "Evergreen & Noble streets."

Rostenkowski has maintained it is a normal office and the payments were properly disclosed to the public.

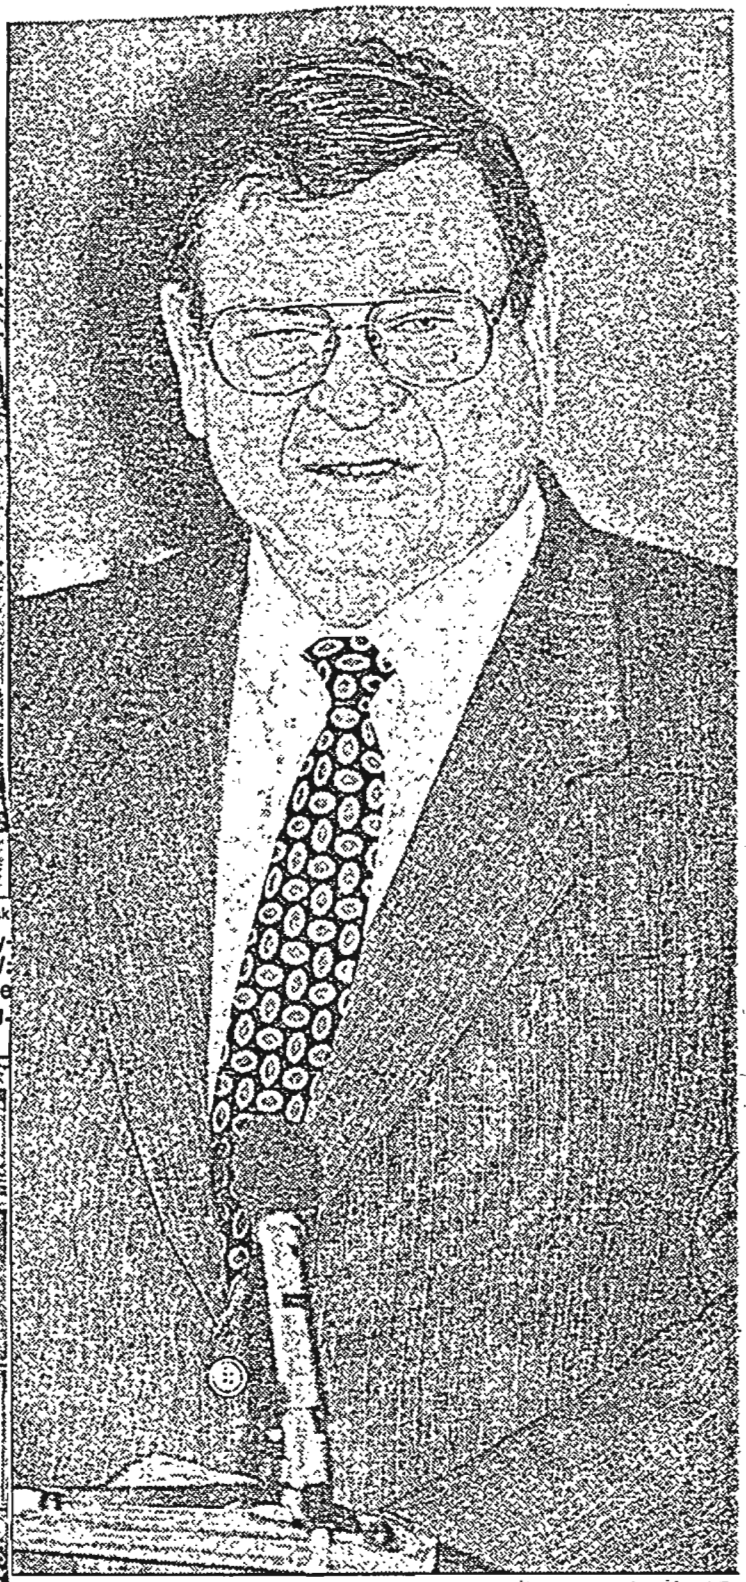
CONGRESSIONAL AND WARD OFFICES—$329,350-plus

A pair of adjoining storefront buildings at 2148-2150 N. Damen have been a cash cow for Rostenkowski's family for decades, thanks largely to taxpayers.

The federal government has paid Rostenkowski's sisters $216,910 to lease the 2148 building for his congressional district office since 1970.



Incomplete records show that city taxpayers and unknown sources—possibly secret campaign funds Rostenkowski maintained—paid the congressman's daughters at least another $112,440 since 1985 to rent the 2150 building as an office for Ald. Terry M. Gabinski and the 32nd Ward Regular Democratic Organization.



Rostenkowski is allowed by law to rent from his sisters at a fair market price, but investigators are studying the office arrangement in an effort to determine if federal funds were subsidizing the ward political operation.

Rostenkowski: I'm innocent

WASHINGTON—Defiant and emotional, Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) emphatically denied Saturday that he had committed any crime in his 41 years in public life and he announced that he had retained one of the capital's best-known criminal lawyers to lead his defense.

"I want to make it absolutely clear that I have committed no crime and have engaged in no illegal or unethical conduct," Rostenkowski said at a news conference arranged at his direction, but at which he answered no questions.

"This has been a very difficult time for me and my family. I am frustrated and angry with these false allegations."

On Saturday, the Tribune reported that the Chicago Board of Trade had paid two of Rostenkowski's daughters, Stacy and Dawn, a total of $200,000 since 1983 for jobs for which board insiders said they seldom reported.

After a week of being pummeled by stories that implicated him in criminal activity in the cash-for-stamps scandal at the U.S. House's post office, Rostenkowski summoned the media to the setting where he enjoys his most complete authority, the hearing room of the Ways and Means Committee.

Taking several deep breaths as he walked to the podium, with his new legal team trailing him, Rostenkowski read a short statement and retreated into one of the committee's private rooms.

"I am presumed innocent," the 65-year-old Chicago Democrat said. "I have been charged with nothing, but most importantly I am, in fact, innocent of any wrongdoing."

He also vowed that the criminal investigation would not deter his work as President Clinton's principal lieutenant in the House during budget negotiations.

"... I will not allow the current situation to interfere with the important legislative work that I and others are presently engaged in and which is so important to the American people," Rostenkowski said.

But in choosing Washington lawyer Robert Bennett as his new counsel, Rostenkowski seemed braced for the possibility of a trial.

A tough son of Brooklyn, by way of Georgetown Law School, Bennett is the brother of former Education Secretary and presidential drug policy adviser William Bennett.

Robert Bennett gained national prominence as counsel to the U.S. Senate during the inquiry involving five senators tied to convicted savings and loan figure Charles H. Keating Jr., and has represented Washington power brokers Clark Clifford and Robert Altman in the Bank of Credit and Commerce International scandal.

He regularly bills clients more than $400 an hour.

Rostenkowski's retaining of Bennett came at the end of a week in which he had been most directly tied to possible illegal acts connected to the House post office.

Former Postmaster Robert Rota pleaded guilty Monday to two counts of embezzlement and one count of conspiracy and promised to help the government in building its case against others in the cash-for-stamps scheme.

In what one lawyer called "excruiating detail," Rota said he directly passed federal money to "Congressman A" and "Congressman B" and provided precise dates, amounts and voucher numbers.

Rota said that on some occasions, he gave members of Congress cash for stamps. On others, members would falsely sign vouchers stating that they had purchased stamps and Rota would give them cash. Rota kept a special series of vouchers in his desk to accommodate members, sources said.

Documents filed by Rostenkowski matched with ones mentioned by Rota and several sources confirmed that Rostenkowski was "Congressman A." The same sources and records indicated that "Congressman B" is former Rep. Joe Kolter (D-Pa.).

Although the vouchers mentioned in Rota's guilty plea added up to just more than $20,000 in alleged payments to Rostenkowski, sources said that prosecutors have evidence indicating the total amount might be $100,000. Sources said that the additional funds apparently came from checks drawing funds from Rostenkowski's congressional fund and political action committee accounts.

Sources also said that while the investigation of the post office is essentially complete, agents from the FBI, and the Internal Revenue Service among others, are in Chicago in a broader investigation of Rostenkowski's finances.

But Saturday, Rostenkowski attempted to shift the attention from charges to his own unequivocal defense in the room where he asserts almost unchallenged power.

An oil portrait of him hangs on one wall. The room was elaborately refurbished a few years ago, at Rostenkowski's direction, to celebrate the 100th anniversary of the tax writing committee. Donations from corporations dependent on the committee's working of the tax code, and the ear of the committee's chairman, funded nearly all of the work.

'I HAVE COMMITTED NO CRIME'

BY FRANK JOHNSTON—THE WASHINGTON POST

At a Capitol Hill news conference, Ways and Means Committee Chairman Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) says he is innocent of wrongdoing in the House Post Office scandal and pledges to stay on the job. He says he is "frustrated and angry" at the allegations. Story on Page A6.

House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.), flanked by a new, high-powered legal defense team, yesterday declared he was innocent of any wrongdoing in the House Post Office scandal and pledged to stay on the job.

Breaking his silence after nearly a week of unrelenting bad news linking him to a decades-old embezzlement scheme at the post office, Rostenkowski summoned reporters to his committee's cavernous conference chambers to answer what he called "the many unfair, false and baseless allegations" about him.

"I want to make it absolutely clear that I have committed no crime and have engaged in no illegal or unethical conduct," Rostenkowski said.

The beefy, sad-faced Illinois Democrat, leaning into a lectern, said this has been a very difficult time for him and his family and that he was both "frustrated and angry."

"I am presumed to be innocent," he said. "I have been charged with nothing, but most importantly I am, in fact, innocent of any wrongdoing."

With a federal grand jury probe of alleged wrongdoing at the post office picking up steam, Rostenkowski, 65, dropped lawyer Stanley M. Brand late Friday night in favor of lawyer Robert S. Bennett and his partner, Carl S. Rauh.

Bennett, one of the most successful criminal lawyers in Washington, commands $415 an hour in fees and has handled such high-profile clients as Clark M. Clifford and Robert A. Altman in the BCCI case, former defense secretary Caspar W. Weinberger and Cincinnati Reds owner Marge Schott.

In the process of handling hundreds of white-collar criminal cases, Bennett has lost only two at trial.

Rostenkowski, one of the most powerful figures on Capitol Hill, has been the subject of a yearlong federal grand jury investigation examining everything from suspected stamps-for-cash swaps at the House Post Office to every facet of his personal, official and campaign finances.

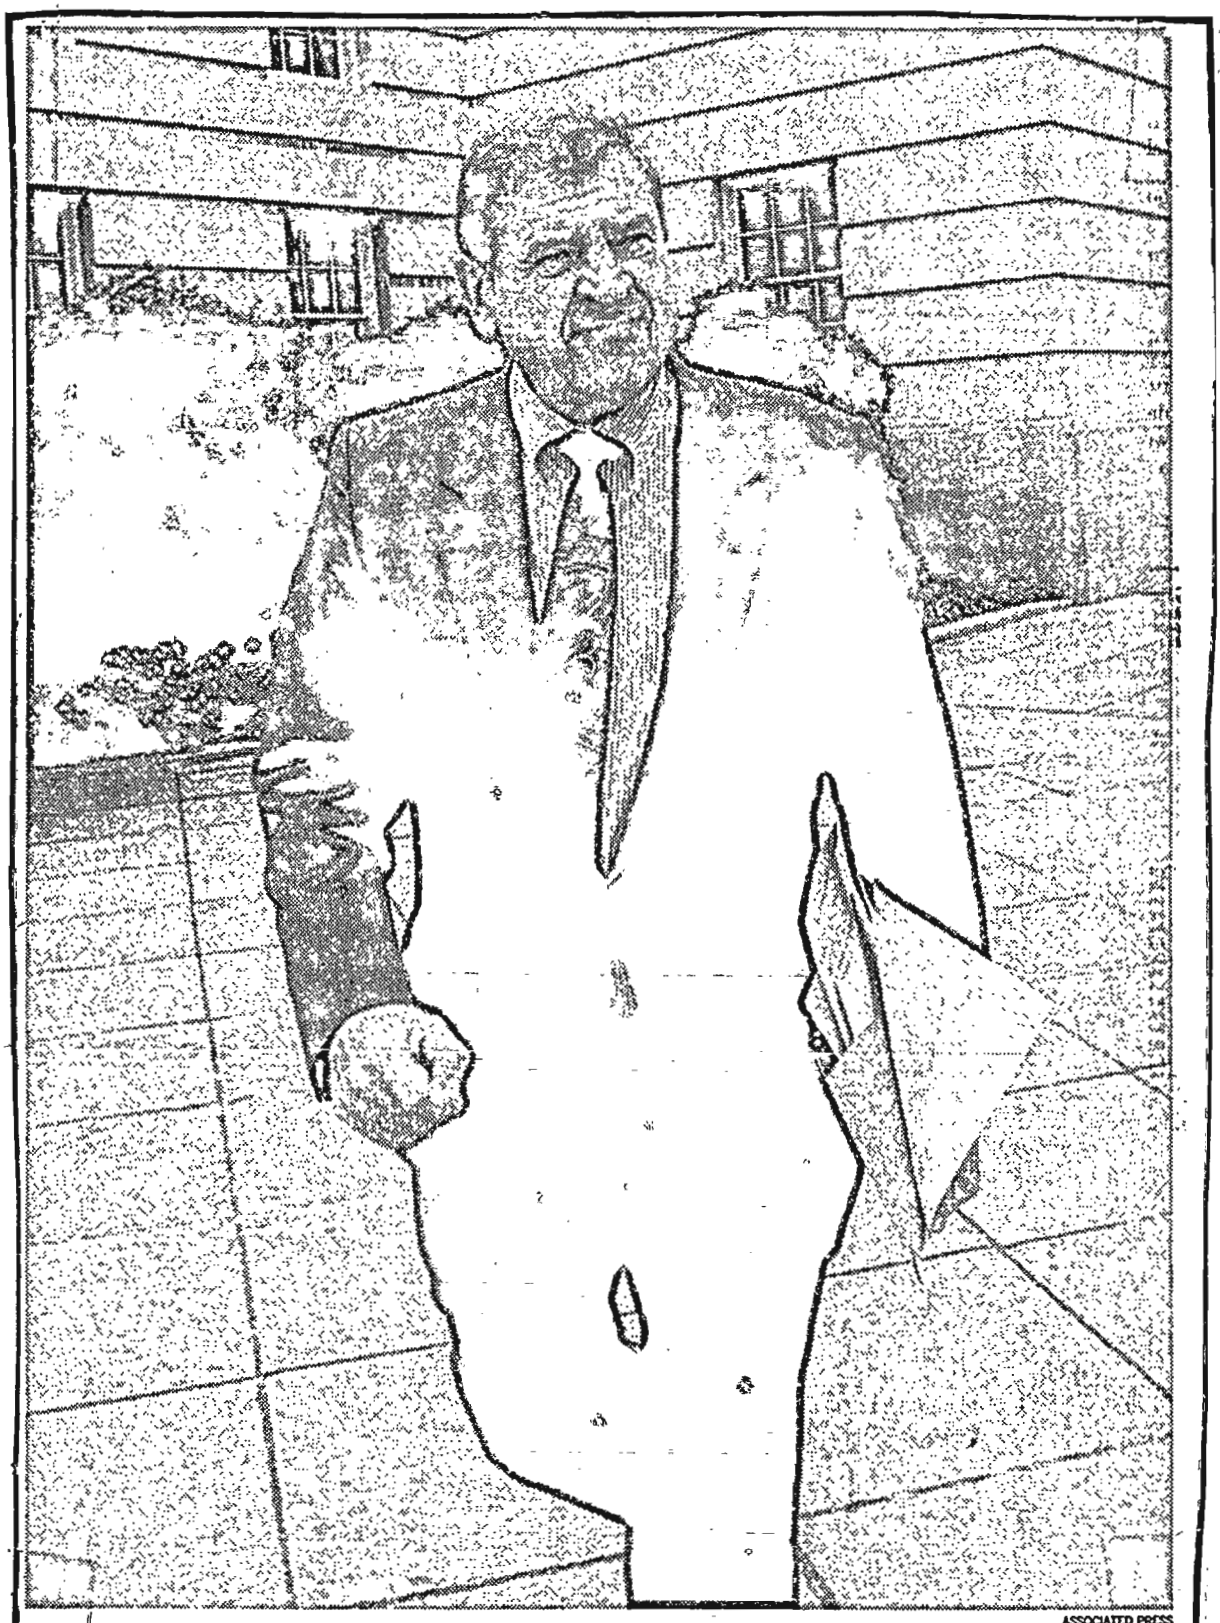
His legal and political problems reached critical mass last Monday, when former House postmaster Robert V. Rota pleaded guilty to helping several representatives embezzle money from the post office. Evidence contained in court papers in the case indicated that Rostenkowski was one of those and that he allegedly received a total of $21,300 in 19 transactions between May 1985 and April 1991.

By late Friday, an agitated Rep. Rostenkowski concluded he needed to make a dramatic shift in his legal and public relations strategy, according to aides.

Rostenkowski, who as the longtime chairman of the House tax-writing committee has taken a leading role in shaping a compromise over President Clinton's deficit-reduction package, spent the rest of the week dodging questions.

Under the advice of his former counsel, Brand, he refused to say anything about the allegations, even as House Republicans began stirring up the political pot and political enemies back home in Chicago were demanding that he resign.

By late Friday, an agitated Rostenkowski concluded he needed to make a dramatic shift in his legal and public relations strategy, according to aides. In a midnight phone conversation, Rostenkowski hired the resourceful Bennett to take over the case, and they agreed to launch a counteroffensive, beginning with yesterday's Capitol Hill news conference.



With the Capitol abuzz with speculation that Rostenkowski has lost some of his effectiveness in dealing with the president's economic policies and the White House's expected health care proposals, Rostenkowski declared that he "will not allow the current situation to interfere" with his work.

Rostenkowski declined to answer any questions and marched out of the room after completing his brief statement. Among those unanswered questions were inquiries about his dealings with Rota and why his office spent so much on postage stamps when he enjoys congressional franking privileges.

A retired House Post Office employee, James C. Smith, told the Chicago Sun-Times last week that he was given a $2,000 expense account voucher for postage stamps in the summer of 1989 that Rota turned in for cash for Rostenkowski.

Smith, who has testified before the grand jury under a grant of immunity from prosecution, said, however, that he "never handed Rostenkowski any money directly." Smith also said he had never met Rostenkowski before he was given the patronage position at the post office.

Federal prosecutors indicated in court documents that Smith was hired through Rostenkowski's "personal intervention" to help facilitate the alleged scam.

details of the alleged scheme between Rostenkowski and Rota when the former postmaster pleaded guilty last week:

Why would a guy like Dan Rostenkowski—one of the most powerful men in Congress—risk so much for so little money?

These are some of the known areas of investigation involving the veteran Northwest Side congressman:

This raises a question of whether Rostenkowski stockpiled stamps during the two-year hiatus and converted them to cash later, when Rota promoted a patronage employee of Rostenkowski to the supervisor of accounts position.

Investigators are examining automobile deals involving Rostenkowski and a Wilmette auto dealership that involved the expenditure of $141,440 in taxpayer and campaign funds.

Rosty Feels He's Worth More Than He's Paid

By Michael Briggs
Sun-Times Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON—For a long time, Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) has thought he was worth more than he makes. And he has not been shy about saying so.

The veteran Chicago congressman made no bones about how underpaid he thought was when he introduced a bill in 1988 that would have let members of Congress sign up for salaries on a sliding scale.

He was was worth every penny of the $135,000-a-year he would have made at top end of the pay scale, he said. Incoming congressmen or others who thought less of themselves and their legislative skills could have started at the bottom of the pay range, which Rostenkowski would have set at $89,500.

"I would personally sign in at the highest end of the scale," Rostenkowski said in a speech to colleagues, who often cower at voting for far more modest pay raises for themselves.

Veterans are worth more than rookie congressmen to their constituents, argued Rostenkowski, who was first sent to Washington in 1958 by Chicago voters who have been loyal to him ever since.

The Rostenkowski pay plan never was paid any serious attention.

The Washington Post was blunt in an editorial: "The idea is preposterous," it said at the time.

Rostenkowski once admitted that, after he made the proposal, his mail was "running a little hostile."

But he defended the idea as a more honest and less hypocritical way for members to remunerate themselves.

"In being shy about declaring our worth in an honest way, all we do is demean our office and reinforce the public misimpressions about public service," Rostenkowski said.

Although he said he had no illusions that the plan would ever pass, he explained he was "attracted to it because it represents a giant step toward the honesty and pride so sorely missing from the way we do things now. Let's be honest with the American people and with ourselves."

While Rostenkowski's pay plan never passed, there have been raises since then. The base salary of a member of Congress now is $133,644.

House Votes Against Releasing Documents on Post Office Probe

By GREG MILLER
TIMES STAFF WRITER

WASHINGTON—After fierce debate that forced Speaker Thomas S. Foley (D-Wash.) to the House floor to deny accusations about his conduct, Democrats successfully squelched a Republican effort Thursday to release records of an internal investigation of the House post office.

The House voted virtually along party lines, 244 to 183, to accede to a Justice Department request that files and testimony from the investigation remain confidential until completion of criminal proceedings that recently implicated House Ways and Means Chairman Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.).

Former House Postmaster Robert V. Rota pleaded guilty Monday in federal court to conspiracy and embezzlement and said that he had schemed with two congressmen to trade stamps purchased with government funds for tens of thousands of dollars in cash over a 20-year period. Although names were not mentioned in Rota's plea bargain papers, related documents indicated that Rostenkowski was one of those congressmen.

Rostenkowski, who maintains his innocence, is an ally of the White House in current conference committee efforts to forge a compromise between the House and Senate on President Clinton's economic package. If indicted, Rostenkowski, who voted to support the Democrats' resolution Thursday but was absent for the debate, would have to relinquish his chairmanship until proved innocent.

House Republicans had been pushing for release of documents generated by a bipartisan task force that reported its findings on the House post office scandal last July 22. A report by Republican members of the task force heaped blame on House Democrats, although virtually ignoring stamps-for-cash allegations. Democratic members concluded that there was "no merit whatsoever" to allegations that House members had abused the stamp procurement process.

In remarks on the House floor Thursday, Minority Leader Robert H. Michel (R-Ill.) urged release of the documents, calling on House members to "summon up our last remaining shreds of courage and dignity and let the American people see what the insiders already know."

Democrats argued that releasing the documents would jeopardize the investigation currently being conducted by the Department of Justice, citing a letter from U.S. Atty. J. Ramsey Johnson asking the House to refrain from releasing any materials from the task force inquiry.

House Majority Leader Richard A. Gephardt (D-Mo.) said that releasing the documents would "thwart the ability of the prosecutor to gather information effectively and possibly impair the U.S. attorneys from completing their investigation successfully."

The debate took a rancorous turn when Rep. Bill Thomas (R-Bakersfield) challenged Foley to come to the floor to "confirm or deny" allegations that the Speaker had a telephone conversation with Atty. Gen. Janet Reno "about the advisability of releasing information from the task force."

Johnson's letter, providing Democrats with "the cover needed" to block release of the documents, arrived at the House shortly after Foley's call, Thomas said.

In a rare display of anger, Foley stepped down from his Speaker's chair and called Thomas' suspicions "totally and absolutely incorrect," denying that he, anyone from his staff or any member of the Democratic leadership made such a call.

He chastised Thomas for not extending "the simple courtesy" of asking him in private whether the allegations were true before voicing them on the House floor.

Thomas quickly retreated, saying: "I certainly apologize because I have no factual evidence."

The Chicago Sun-Times reported Thursday that Rostenkowski's lawyers tried unsuccessfully to delay announcement of Rota's guilty plea, citing possible damage to efforts to pass Clinton's budget.

Rostenkowski's lawyers did not respond to calls for comment, but Justice Department spokesman Dean St. Dennis confirmed that there were conversations between a Rostenkowski lawyer and a mid-level Justice Department attorney before Rota entered his plea. He declined to detail the conversations.

But Kevin Ohlson, a spokesman for the U.S. attorney's office here, said he was certain that "no one from main Justice attempted to get a delay" in the Rota proceeding. Rostenkowski maintains his innocence.

of Mr. Rota's secret testimony before the House task force where he denied any wrongdoing and said he did only what superiors in the Democratic Party told him to do.

"If we keep these records hidden, the message to the American people will be: If you are an insider, if you are a favored reporter, you can see the transcripts and that's OK.... But if you are an average American citizen, you need not apply" to review the records," said Mr. Michel, Illinois Republican.

House Majority Leader Richard A. Gephardt, whose own resolution to keep the records sealed was agreed to by a vote of 244-183 along mostly party lines, said release of the documents could be harmful to the ongoing criminal probe.

"I cannot comprehend why anyone, in the face of the clear, unequivocal recommendation of the U.S. attorney, would vote to let documents out which could interfere with, damage, obstruct or bungle" the federal criminal investigation, the Missouri Democrat said.

Mr. Gephardt was referring to a letter released yesterday from Mr. Johnson, the interim U.S. attorney, who opposed release of the documents because it could impede his criminal probe. So far, Mr. Rota and eight other persons have been convicted.

When Rep. Bill Thomas of California, the ranking Republican on the House Administration Committee, accused Democrats of conspiring with the Justice Department to generate the Johnson letter, the floor fight began.

Speaker Thomas S. Foley, Washington Democrat, who was presiding over the House at the time, bolted from his chair and, after a few minutes, called the Republicans' assertions "totally and absolutely incorrect."

"Let me make it again abundantly clear," Mr. Foley said in a raised voice full of anger. "No one has talked to the United States attorney or the attorney general" about producing the letter to ensure that records remain locked up.

"I have not talked to [Attorney General] Janet Reno since she was sworn in," Mr. Foley said. He asked why Republicans had failed to have what he called the simple courtesy of checking the accuracy of their charge with him before making it on the floor.

Renewed scandal threatens Democrats' agenda

By Donald Lambro
THE WASHINGTON TIMES

NEWS ANALYSIS

The House post office scandal threatens to further erode public support for the Democratic Congress and President Clinton's budget plan at a time when there is very little backing to spare.

The scandal, in which funds were embezzled from the post office and which could lead to the indictment of House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Dan Rostenkowski, is the latest of a series of episodes that have shrunk public support for Congress and sparked a national movement for term limits.

Republican leaders say the scandal is one more example of what four decades of "corrupt one-party rule" have wrought, and they believe that it gives their party an opportunity to persuade the voters to sweep the Democrats from power.

"It reminds the voters one more time that something's wrong in Washington, that nothing has changed, and the Democrats have once again abused their privileges," said GOP strategist Ed Rollins.

"People may not follow every detail of this scandal, but they pay attention when it's someone this big. They know that one of the chief Democratic leaders in Congress has come under serious scrutiny," Mr. Rollins said.

"It brings the stench of scandal back and reminds the voters of what's been going for a long time."

A legislative lobbyist for a business group, who asked not to be named, said: "This couldn't have come at a worse time for the Democrats and for the White House. It hurts them across the board."

A national survey of voters this month by Public Opinion Strategies found that 78 percent believe that "Congress isn't doing the job we elected it to do, and it's time for a change, even if it means voting against my congressman." That's up from 70 percent two years ago.

For the Democratic majority that runs Congress, that could mean a further loss of House seats in next year's congressional elections—and even minority status in the Senate.

For Mr. Clinton it could mean a continuing loss of support for the budget plan he is struggling to get through Congress, and a deeper decline in public confidence in the Democrats' ability to govern.

If Mr. Rostenkowski is indicted, the scandal will have robbed Mr. Clinton of the one man whose influence he needs to enact his budget plan. Under House rules, Mr. Rostenkowski would have to give up his chairmanship.

With a growing number of Democrats voicing doubts about Mr. Clinton's budget plan and many Americans opposed to it, the president can ill afford another congressional scandal.

The case involved several Congressmen in a scheme to embezzle money from the post office by cashing in official vouchers for postage stamps.

While he has not been indicted, the fact that he has been publicly linked to the scheme by the former House postmaster, Robert Rota, puts the Democrats in an awkward political situation.

"There is no better legislative strategist in the Democratic Party," Mr. Rollins said. "But the bottom line is that Rostenkowski is damaged today and the White House has to be careful of its relationship [with him] and they have to be concerned at a very critical time."

"This is a time when Clinton can ill-afford any distractions," Mr. Rollins added. "And Rostenkowski's possible indictment can be a long-term distraction.

"I think it certainly affects the budget bill, but also their long-term goals on health care and everything else that goes through his committee," he said.

A chief House GOP strategist said, "Even the selling of the plan is hurt by the fact that their key lieutenant is under this cloud, so everybody gets tainted by it."

Former Democratic National Chairman Charles Manatt disagreed: "The man is innocent until proven guilty, and I believe he'll stay."

"The banking and post office scandals are in the past, we went through a cleansing election in 1992," Mr. Manatt said. "The bank was closed, we have a new sergeant of arms in the House, people were indicted, fired, and some members retired or lost. That's all behind us now."

In the final analysis, "the party in power will rise or fall on their ability to improve the economy," he said.

A lobbyist for the AFL-CIO said: "The damage, if there is damage, will be in the next election cycle in the GOP's attack ads. That's what we have to be worried about."

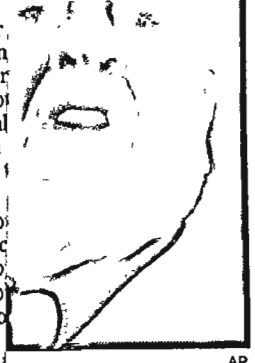
Rostenkowski vows i

The lawmaker says the post office scandal won't keep him from getting the president's budget through Congress

By Joyce Price
THE WASHINGTON TIMES

Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, Illinois Democrat, said yesterday that he is "innocent of any wrongdoing" in the House Post Office scandal and pledged that he will not allow his current legal problems to interfere with his legislative work.



Speaking at a hastily called news conference at the House Ways and Means Committee, which he chairs, Mr. Rostenkowski also announced that he has hired Bob Bennett, a lawyer experienced in white-collar crime, and his partner, Carl Rauh, a former U.S. attorney, to represent him in what he described as a "pending criminal investigation."

Mr. Rostenkowski, a key negotiator in House-Senate efforts to forge a compromise on President Clinton's budget bill, has been linked to a grand jury probe of embezzling and money-laundering at the House post office. He has not been publicly named as a suspect by investigators, nor has he been charged with any crime.

innocent. I have been charged with nothing, but most importantly I am, in fact, innocent of any wrongdoing."

Mr. Rostenkowski also said he wanted to assure the public that he "will not allow the current situation to interfere with the important legislative work that I and others are presently engaged in and which is so important to the American people."

In an interview with WBBM-TV in Chicago, Mr. Rostenkowski elaborated on that theme. "I have a job to do: the deficit-reduction program this president has proposed. I'm totally involved in it. I'd prefer not to have this cloud over my head. But I'm totally involved in it."

On Thursday, the Justice Department confirmed a report in the Chicago Sun-Times that an attorney for Mr. Rostenkowski made at least one call to the department to seek to delay Mr. Rota's plea until after a House-Senate conference committee had completed its work on the president's budget package.

In the WBBM-TV interview, part of which was broadcast yesterday on WTOP Radio, Mr. Rostenkowski was asked if he might be thinking of retiring.

"There comes a time when one has to think of retiring or another career," he said. "I'm still young enough so that I could step aside for a new member of Congress.

"I haven't decided what I'm going to do. But if the lines forming are as long as you suggest, maybe I've got a chance of getting re-elected."

In both his press statement yesterday and the WBBM-TV interview, Mr. Rostenkowski expressed gratitude for the support he's received.

"This has been a very difficult time for me and my family. I am frustrated and angry with these false accusations," he said at the news conference.

Columbia, local suitors want to buy

Columbia Hospital Corp., a fast-growing Texas-based health care provider with plans to become the largest hospital chain in the country, wants to expand its local presence, possibly through the purchase of Grant Hospital of Chicago.

For the past year, financially pressured Grant has been searching in vain for a strategic partner to resuscitate its flagging prospects.

Spurned in attempts to affiliate with Oak Brook-based Evangelical Health Systems and the University of Chicago Hospitals, the Near North Side facility may now sell outright to one of a handful of other medical centers, Crain's Chicago Business learned.

According to a strategic plan unveiled at a July 7 meeting of Grant's board, four groups besides Fort Worth-based Columbia are interested in acquiring the hospital: Columbus-Cabrini Health System, Continental Bank recently treated 50 of its best customers to a dinner party featuring conservative columnist George Will in the bank's newly renovated grand banking hall.

Chasing the high-net-worth crowd will prove risky for some institutions, says Marlbeth Rahe, Harris Bank's director of personal financial services.

Managing money for wealthy families is a lucrative business that Continental expects will grow nearly twice as fast as its overall business in the next three years.

WASHINGTON—Disbelief, denial, grief, anger, acceptance—the emotions normally associated with death are roiling those with close ties to Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, even as they refuse to write his political obituary.

As he huddles with the president and tackles final negotiations on the administration's $500-billion deficit-reduction package, the veteran Chicago Democrat faces a potential career-ending indictment at the very peak of his power and influence.

No lobbyist would write off a sitting chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, no matter what his predicament. But those whose interests he shared and supported are contemplating life without Rosty in bereaved tones.

There is disbelief that someone who could have retired last year and kept more than $1 million in campaign funds for his own use would do something illegal for a small fraction of that.

air carriers has declined by 47%, said Deborah McElroy, vice-president of the Regional Airline Assn. in Washington, D.C.

"There are some people who say they will continue to decline," said Ms. McElroy, who added that the survivors tend to be healthy.

What's more, the 50 biggest regional airlines carry 98% of all passengers across the country, making it difficult for inexperienced independents to hang on long enough to earn their wings.

Yet an untapped market for dependable feeder service at Midway gives the commuter carriers a chance, under one condition: that they don't try to go head-to-head in the same outlying cities.

"Is there room for both of us in some of these (same) markets? No. It's pretty thin," said Courtney Anderson, chief operating officer of Chicago Express.

Not enough fliers

Analysts say there simply aren't enough fliers in most mid-sized markets to justify two carriers. So, if Midway Connection and Chicago Express go head-to-head, neither is likely to be profitable.

Right now, the airlines don't plan to fly into the same markets. But that could change.

Midway Connection, which has been flying as Direct Air since 1981, has flown mostly low-frequency routes subsidized by the federal government, receiving grants ranging from $590 to $750 per flight, said President Wil Davis, who founded Direct Air.

The federal program, Essential Air Service (EAS), was created to provide flights to cities abandoned by the free market, such as Muncie, Ind., and Downstate Galesburg. Midway Connection serves 13 cities out of Midway, but not all of them are EAS flights.

Now, the revamped airline wants to change direction and challenge Chicago Express for Midway Connection's old market.

Midway Connection was reborn when Gary-based Direct Air agreed to merge with an investment group led by Eugene Gauss Jr., president of Lansing, Mich.-based Northern Star Cos., a $50-million distribution concern.

Along with several Midway Airline survivors, Mr. Gauss had been trying to revive Midway Connection ever since the mother ship was grounded in November 1991.

"We worked with the (bankruptcy trustee) for two years," said Mr. Gauss, chief executive of Midway Connection. "But we didn't want Midway Airlines' (assets) or its logo. We wanted Midway Connection."

In the end, the castoff group won control of the Midwest Connection moniker, teamed with Direct Air and is considering expansion to many cities once served by the original Midway Connection.

That would place it in direct competition with Chicago Express, which could trigger a fare war, analysts warn. Midway Connection had also flown to Louisville and Indianapolis, but don't expect the new entity to add routes to those cities.

Unlikely encounter

"There's no way in hell that we'll go head-to-head in cities now served by Southwest (Airlines)," Mr. Gauss said.

Chicago Express is beating Midway Connection to the punch, planning to begin service Aug. 9 to three cities—Milwaukee and Madison, Wis., and South Bend, Ind.—with a total of 25 flights a day.

Its fare structure is simple, with only three prices per one-way route ranging from $39 to $69. The start-up, which is leasing five 19-passenger turboprop aircraft and is subleasing gate space from Southwest Airlines, is owned by two investors with experience in commercial aviation.

One is Carol Brady, wife of the president of Atlanta-based Phoenix Airline Services, a holding company that operates two regional carriers for Northwest Airlines. The other owner is Bryan Bedford, chief financial officer of the Atlanta concern.

Chicago Express, which is still flying test runs for federal regulators at DuPage County Airport, is already talking about adding "several more routes" this fall.

tax lobbyist, "it couldn't be more off the wall."

There is denial that facts spelled out in court are true—that perhaps key witnesses are lying or his staff was somehow responsible or there is some other logical explanation.

"On or off the record, I hope he gets through this," said David Yudin, Chicago's chief Washington lobbyist. "I hope there's nothing to it."

There is grief in contemplating what Rep. Rostenkowski has done for Chicago over the last 34 years, and anger that his clout could abruptly disappear for such a stupid reason.

Getting things done

"You bring in Danny Rostenkowski when it's something you really can't get done," said one lobbyist who represents several Chicago-area interests. If he's guilty of the allegations against him, the lobbyist added, "I guess he never stopped to think what he was doing. It was easy, it was there."

And finally, there is acceptance that, guilty or not, Rep. Rostenkowski is trapped in events beyond his control.

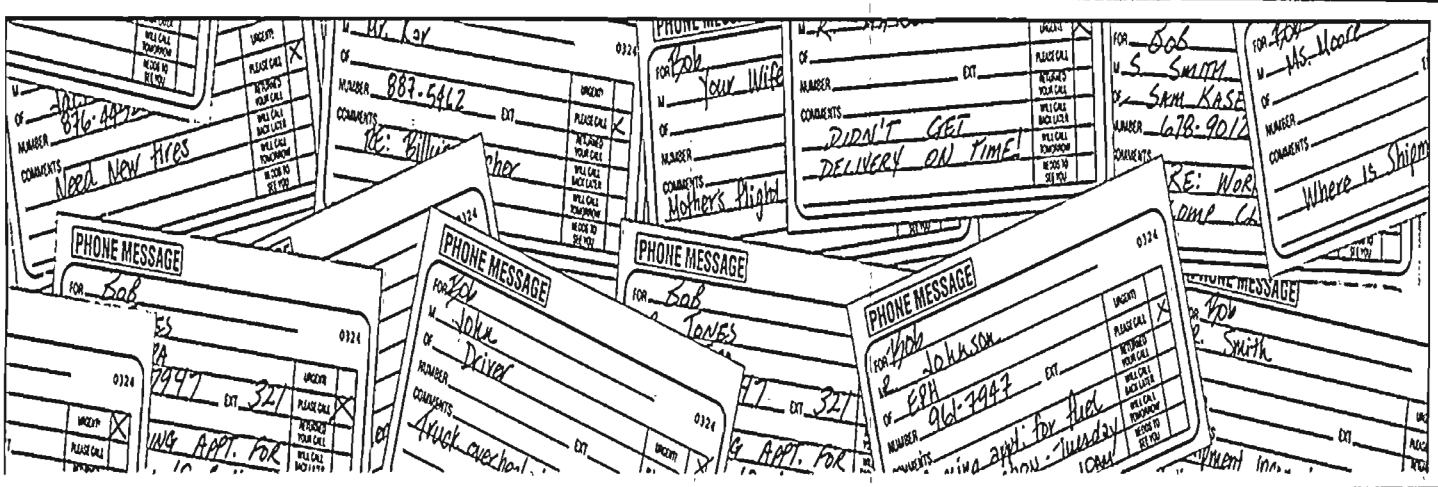
"The whole thing has a Greek-tragedy character to it," said James Healey, a lobbyist and former longtime aid to Rep. Rostenkowski. "It's inexplicable to me."

Before last week, it was plausible to dismiss the long-running grand jury investigation into the veteran legislator's personal finances as inconclusive or politically motivated.

But a guilty plea by former House Postmaster Robert Rota has clearly fingered the House Ways and Means Committee chairman in a scheme to embezzle cash from the government, leaving no room for the Clinton administration to sidetrack the case.

"Everybody knew you couldn't get Rostenkowski without Rota," said Kenneth Robinson, attorney for James Smith, a former supervisor at the House Post Office who first alleged that members of Congress, including Mr. Rostenkowski, converted part of their office postal allowance into cash.

As spelled out in court by the U.S. attorney's office, Mr. Rota conspired with an unnamed "Congressman A" who used vouchers from his office postage allowance and campaign funds to buy stamps, which were then exchanged for "untraceable cash." In some cases, cash was provided without any stamps changing hands.



Possibility of indictment

The dates and voucher numbers of those transactions reportedly match the public records for Rep. Rostenkowski, leaving little doubt that an indictment of the Chicago Democrat is "simply a matter of time," as Jay Stephens, the former U.S. attorney who launched the investigation, said last week.

Innocent or not, the problem is that an indictment would force Rep. Rostenkowski to step down immediately as chairman of the powerful tax-writing panel he has led since 1981. Under House rules, the trial doesn't matter. The indictment itself is the sentence.

could stop the investigation now, but that seems unlikely, given the amount of evidence made public last week.

Investigators are reportedly preparing a case that goes far beyond the cash-for-stamps scheme, which a source in the U.S. attorney's office refused to confirm or deny.

While the deficit reduction package is likely to be wrapped up soon, Rep. Rostenkowski's negotiating skills and political acumen are crucial to the administration's effort to advance health care reform and a North American Free Trade Agreement in the next few months.

Likewise, the implications for Chicago and Illinois are hard to overstate. While other members of the delegation have played a more active role as Mr. Rostenkowski spent more time on committee matters in the last decade, he remains the catalyst, the 800-pound gorilla who makes things happen.

It was late one night last year, after a television interview during the primary, that Rep. Rostenkowski voiced those implications clearly as he and an aide stepped out onto a nearly deserted State Street mall.

"He looked up and down (the street) and said, 'I got the money inserted to make this mall and now they want me to put money in to take it out,' " recalled Thom Serafin, his media consultant. "Then he said, 'What the city needs desperately is long-term planning because I won't always be around to make these things happen.' "

When the scandal shoe pinches . . .

Dan Rostenkowski

Once again, the Democratic-controlled Congress has been tarred by scandal and corruption. This time it involves a former House employee who pleaded guilty to helping several Democratic lawmakers embezzle money from the House Post Office.

Harry Truman, who set an example by using his own postage stamps on his personal correspondence while in the White House, must be rolling in his grave.

A number of people have been implicated in the scandal. But the political bombshell that stunned Democratic leaders most of all came from the former House postmaster, Robert Rota, who implicated Ways and Means Committee Chairman Dan Rostenkowski, Illinois Democrat, as one of several congressmen who allegedly bilked taxpayers out of thousands of dollars.

The charges could not come at a worse time for the Democrats and for Bill Clinton as they struggle to persuade a majority of their own party to support the president's controversial tax-and-spend package and to show the nation they can govern.

The White House, saddled with a weak and inexperienced legislative lobbying staff, has been counting on the veteran chairman of the tax-writing committee to overcome the obstacles before them and to help hammer out a budget bill in conference committee that can win final approval in the House and Senate.

No formal charges have been brought, but a grand jury is hearing evidence and had subpoenaed the Chicago Democrat last year to give testimony. He flatly refused, vowing to use the Fifth Amendment against self-incrimination if forced to appear.

If Rep. Rostenkowski is indicted, he would be forced under House rules to give up his chairmanship and thus would lose the essence of his political power.

That puts President Clinton and Democratic congressional leaders in a very awkward political situation as they fight to win support for a budget bill among rank-and-file Democrats, many of whom have deep doubts about its impact on the economy and deeper insecurities about its impact on their political careers.

A tax bill that polls show is strongly opposed by a majority of Americans has, perhaps, even less credibility when it is being crafted and pushed through the legislative process by politicians whose ethics and honesty are being questioned by the criminal justice system.

The widening post-office scandal, which has been under investigation for the past two years, is but the latest in a long list of corruption

Donald Lambro, chief political correspondent, of The Washington Times, is a nationally syndicated columnist.

Democrats and Republicans in the House of Representatives really tore into each other on Thursday. Republicans wanted to release the full contents of a year-old investigation into corruption at the House Post Office; Democrats did not.

Tempers flared because the affair contains all the sordid essentials of scandal: money, power, nepotism, threats, betrayal and deceit. It already has snared House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Dan Rostenkowski, Illinois Democrat, who allegedly received more than $21,000 in improper cash payments from the House postmaster. And the documents suppressed last week by the Democratic majority could compound the embarrassment by laying bare some weirder aspects of modern congressional life.

According to one source who has seen the materials, they contain stories of threats against postal workers; evidence of broader abuse at the post office; even the bizarre tale of a congressman's son who arrived at the post office one day, tore off his clothes, strapped on some rubber bands and pretended to be an airplane.

The debate about releasing the documents would never have taken place but for a corruption that dwarfs the host of post-office scandals: The fact that Congress brazenly exempts itself from laws that it imposes on everybody else.

The present roster of A-B-C (All-But-Congress) laws includes:

The Social Security Act;

The National Labor Relations Act;

The National Labor Standards Act;

The Civil Rights Act of 1964;

The Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967;

The Occupational Safety and Health Act of 1970;

The Freedom of Information Act;

Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972

The Age Discrimination Act of 1975;

The Ethics in Government Act of 1978;

The Independent Counsel Act;

The Americans With Disabilities Act of 1990;

The Family and Medical Leave Act of 1993.

If politicians had to obey the Freedom of Information Act, the contents of last year's investigation would be public and members could devote themselves to cleaning up the mess rather than denying it.

But that's the point: Denial has become a way of life on Capitol Hill. Rather than acknowledging the burdens of, say, the Family and Medical Leave Act, legislators write themselves out of the law and let others deal with the consequences.

Permanent incumbency has corrupted Congress, slowly and by degrees. First, members exempted themselves from laws. Then they granted themselves favors: a post office, gymnasiums, free mailing privileges, chauffeured limousines for leadership, parking privileges, larger staffs, campaign slush funds. With each change came a shift in habits, a period of adjustment and a new moral atmosphere. Eventually, members rationalized their perks as essential tools for doing the people's business.

When the Bush administration proposed applying conflict-of-interest statutes to congressional staffers several years ago, a leading member of Congress explained to then-White House Counsel C. Boyden Gray why politicians would never accept the change. "That would be horrible," he said. "To impose criminal liability on our staff for conflicts of interest would be an unconstitutional infringement on our constitutional duty to represent the special interests."

So now the entire system has become rotten and soft, and most Americans share Mark Twain's view that the member of Congress is "the only distinctively native American class of criminal." Recent polls show public esteem for Capitol Hill lawmakers at an all-time low, below 20 percent.

Fortunately, a few politicians want to start a clean-up. Reps. Chris Shays, Connecticut Republican, and Al Swett, New Hampshire Democrat, have cosponsored a bill that would make the laws listed above apply to Congress; Republican Sens. Charles Grassley of Iowa and Don Nickles of Oklahoma have sponsored a similar measure in the Senate.

These reforms seek to restore the bond between lawmakers and the law, and to highlight a fundamental principle of American democracy — that ours is a system of laws and not men. Unfortunately, leaders in both houses so far have consigned the bills to the memory hole.

The lawlessness of today's lawmakers is indefensible, a far more grotesque abuse of public trust than any single scandal. If members of the House and Senate want to earn the title of "honorable," they should retrieve the Shays-Swett and Grassley-Nickles bills from oblivion and pass them before they do anything else. That, at least, would prove politicians have learned that, as far as the law is concerned, they're no different than the rest of us.

scandals in recent years that has turned the House of Representatives into a house of disrepute.

First, Speaker of the House James Wright of Texas, then Democratic Whip Tony Coelho of California were forced to resign in the face of serious ethical questions about their finances. Then came the House restaurant scandal in which many lawmakers never paid for their meals. Then the withering House bank scandal, or "Rubbergate," in which dozens of lawmakers were found to have huge overdrafts on their accounts, sending a number of them down to electoral defeat. And now the post-office scandal involving cash in exchange for official expense vouchers for postage stamps.

There will be calls for administrative reforms to fix the problem. But does anyone trust the Democrats to clean house, especially after the Democratic-run House Administration Committee found no wrongdoing when it first looked into the case?

Yet this is, in many ways, less a scandal about the way the House operates than it is a scandal arising from four decades of one party rule, with all of the attendant patronage, favors, backroom deals and cozy perquisites for people in power.

And it is likely to become the new war cry for Republicans who have been unable to politically convert past congressional scandals into a broad-based national movement to break the Democrats' lock on the House.

The gauntlet was thrown down last week by House GOP leaders who sense that perhaps this time the American people have had enough and are willing to sweep the old political power structure out of Congress.

"Democrats have proven once again that power corrupts and absolute power corrupts absolutely," said Texas Rep. Dick Armey, the chairman of the House Republican Conference. "After 40 years of uninterrupted House rule, it's sad, but not surprising, that Democrats don't realize it's wrong to chisel taxpayers out of thousands of dollars in stamp money."

If indictments are handed down, as many expect they will be, it will be said that the Democratic majority that controls and runs Congress should not be punished because of the misdeeds of the few. But that is the argument that has been used over and over again as the House has lurched from scandal to scandal over the past half dozen years — abusing the public trust, wasting the people's tax dollars and piling debt upon debt.

This isn't just about Dan Rostenkowski and a few other lawmakers who may have gotten caught with their hands in the till. It is about the arrogance of power and a politically encrusted branch of government that needs a thorough, top-to-bottom scouring by the American voters.

Foley insists probe papers in

By Carol Innerst
THE WASHINGTON TIMES

House Speaker Tom Foley insists there are no documents missing from last year's congressional probe of the House post office and says he supports full release of the documents after the criminal investigation is done.

"We're going to cooperate fully and entirely — fully and entirely — with the U.S. attorney's office in seeing that all documents available that are proper to their investigation be released," he said on CBS' "Face the Nation."

"I have no knowledge of any missing documents, but certainly we're going to allow the U.S. attorney to make another review . . . to ensure that there are no missing documents, and I've pledged my cooperation," he said.

"But while the U.S. attorney asked, for the effectiveness of the administration of justice, that they not be released, we ought to abide by his recommendation, and we're going to do that by a vote in the House," he said.

The latest allegations in the House post office scandal link Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee and a key player in pushing President Clinton's budget proposal through Congress, to the grand jury probe of money laundering and embezzling from the post office.

Former House Postmaster Robert V. Rota pleaded guilty Monday to misdemeanor charges in connection with the case. Court papers say he helped two officials identified as "Congressman A" and "Congressman B" embezzle tens of thousands of dollars from the post office, which has since been shut down.

Nearly $21,000 worth of vouchers used by "Congressman A" to convert stamps to cash correspond by date, amount and description to vouchers listed in House records from Mr. Rostenkowski's office.

Officials say Rep. Dan Rostenkowski is not distracted by link to Hill scandal.

Mr. Rostenkowski has not been publicly named as a suspect by investigators nor has he been charged with any crime.

At a news conference Saturday, he declared that he is "innocent of any wrongdoing" and said he has hired Bob Bennett, a lawyer experienced in white-collar crime, and his partner, Carol Rauh, a former U.S. attorney, to represent him in a "pending criminal investigation."

Ex-Post Office Aide Tees Off on Rosty

Although Mary C. Bowman was a loyal and trusted House Post Office employee, she said her bosses still became agitated when she saw Rep. Dan Rostenkowski's golf clubs being boxed for shipment by Express Mail at taxpayer expense.

"I was amazed when I saw the golf clubs," Bowman said in an interview Monday. "It was only one time that I saw them, but I understood it was a very frequent thing. They were very upset that I saw it."

Bowman, 72, who lives in the Washington suburbs, was referred to in federal court documents last week as the unnamed "Employee No. 1" who helped former House Postmaster Robert V. Rota pass cash to a "Congressman A," who sources say is Rostenkowski (D-Ill.), and others.

She said she can back up Rota's story that she helped him exchange cash for stamps from congressmen, but she said she does not know which congressmen received the money.

Bowman, who started as a counter clerk and worked her way up to supervisor of accounts before retiring 32 years later, controlled the money in the House Post Office. She said she has cooperated with federal prosecutors in an investigation of what they have described as the embezzlement of tens of thousands of dollars by congressmen.

Bowman said Rostenkowski's status as a friend of Rota was well-known in the post office. "When Rostenkowski called down to that office, Bob [Rota] jumped. That was Rostenkowski with everybody. When he spoke, you jumped. You just asked, 'How high?' "

Still, Bowman said, she was surprised when she saw Rostenkowski's golf clubs being prepared for shipment by Express Mail. "I saw Joanna [G. O'Rourke] doing it and they were very upset that I saw it."

O'Rourke, the former post office chief of staff, was indicted last September for conspiracy and embezzlement. One allegation was that she sent personal packages at taxpayer expense for herself and for a congressman.

Rota had set aside an account to pay for overnight delivery of packages "relating to the official business of the House Post Office," according to the indictment of O'Rourke.

O'Rourke is cooperating with investigators under a plea bargain. A source familiar with her account said she has identified Rostenkowski as a congressman who often used the Express Mail service for personal packages.

An internal House investigation of the post office found that Rostenkowski was the most frequent user of the Express Mail account, sending at least 33 packages during a two-year period. Without finding wrongdoing by any congressman, the task force noted that $99,676 was billed to the Express Mail account from 1988 to 1991.

Bowman confirmed she has been before a federal grand jury and told she should expect to be called back. Unlike some witnesses in the post office probe, she has not been granted immunity from prosecution. She said she hasn't hired a lawyer, thinking she had done nothing wrong.

"I found out now maybe I did do some things wrong," she said, referring to last week's guilty plea by Rota.

"Bob would bring [congressmen's] stamps to me. I would give him the money. I never knew who gave him the stamps, but if they gave him the stamps they wanted something back ... [Rota] would say, 'The members want it kept secret, Mary. This is between you and I.' "

Rostenkowski has not been charged with any crime and he adamantly proclaimed his innocence after he was linked to the embezzlement scheme in court documents. His lawyer, Robert Bennett, said he would have no comment on Bowman's allegations.

Bowman said she never suspected Rostenkowski of receiving cash that she gave Rota in exchange for stamps.

Rosty Gets Lift From President, Other Dems

Rep. Dan Rostenkowski got a symbolic lift Monday night when President Clinton flew the embattled Chicago Democrat back to Washington aboard Air Force One.

Capping a daylong visit to Chicago, Clinton attended a $5,000-a-ticket Democratic National Committee fund-raiser at the Chicago Historical Society that drew a Who's Who of the city's political and business movers and shakers.

Clinton was careful in his comments about Rostenkowski during an earlier press conference, mindful the House Ways and Means Committee chairman is a key negotiator for his budget and tax package.

Rostenkowski is under investigation by federal prosecutors in an embezzlement scheme in the House Post Office, but no charges have been filed against him and he has denied any wrongdoing.

"I really can't comment on something that hasn't happened," Clinton said. "I think it would be irresponsible . . . for me to do that. I'm a public official. I don't know what the facts are. We'll just have to see what happens."

Inside the fund-raiser, Clinton said: "The most important person in my political party is the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, Dan Rostenkowski." The crowd cheered.

As he hustled into the fund-raiser at 1601 N. Clark, Rostenkowski declined to talk to reporters.

Other local politicians were less taciturn.

"They need him [Rostenkowski] in this budget," Mayor Daley said. "He's handled it well. I think he believes in himself and what he's doing."

Sen. Paul Simon (D-Ill.) defended Clinton's decision to give Rostenkowski a lift aboard Air Force One.

"I think he is following a process we have in this country, assuming people are innocent until proven guilty," said Simon.

Sen. Carol Moseley-Braun (D-Ill.) joined Clinton and Rostenkowski for the Monday night flight on Air Force One.

Chicago Ald. Edwin Eisendrath (43rd) said Rostenkowski "is doing a pretty effective job for us here in this district and for the president. I wouldn't be in any hurry to make the guy a lame duck."

From the business side, Clark Burrus, CTA chairman and senior vice president of the First National Bank of Chicago, downplayed any symbolic significance of the flight.

"He can go back on Air Force One or the Greyhound, that's up to him and whoever makes those kinds of decisions," he said.

A White House spokesman said Rostenkowski had been slated for the trip since before stories broke last week implicating him in the post office scandal.

Rostenkowski was the only member of the state's House delegation to attend the Democratic event, but he passed on chances earlier in the day to stump with Clinton for the administration's economic plan.

Inside the fund-raiser, Rostenkowski received a healthy share of hugs and kisses as the city's business and political elite munched their $5,000 dinners, mingled and made small talk.

William Daley, the mayor's brother and fund-raiser chairman, gave estimates of the committee's haul ranging from $900,000 to $1.1 million.

"Obviously, it's a very substantial show of support as far as the president is concerned," said former Democratic gubernatorial candidate Neil Hartigan.

At the gala, Dan Fabrizio, President of Local 2 of Chicago Firefighters Union, gave Clinton a fire helmet and told him "to put it on when things get hot" trying to push his budget through.

In the cheaper seats—across the street from the fund-raiser—a crowd of about 70 demonstrators protested Clinton's stand on abortion and his retreat from lifting the ban on gays in the military.

Placards read: "No one enlists to get a date," "Be all you can be in the closet," and "Slick: unfair to the unborn."

Joseph Scheidler, executive director of the Pro-Life Action League, said: "This man is our nemesis."

Pro-choice advocates chanted, "Say 1-2-3-4-5, Keep Roe Vs. Wade Alive. 6-7-8-9-10, We'll never go back again!"

REVIEW & OUTLOOK

House of Cards

Two lessons in what passes for ethical candor in the modern Congress: House Ways and Means Chairman Dan Rostenkowski called a press conference Saturday to proclaim his innocence in the House Post Office scandal, then walked out without answering any press questions. Meanwhile, Speaker of the House Tom Foley announced Sunday that he was severing ties to an investment adviser/friend who had earned him $100,000 over four years investing in hard-to-come-by stock offerings.

Mr. Rostenkowski added nothing to what he said a year ago, when he was so adamant that nothing was amiss that he and two Congressional colleagues said they were going to exercise their Fifth Amendment rights and decline to testify. "The subpoenas for us are the product of an overall fishing expedition in an election year," they wrote to the Republican-appointed U.S. Attorney, Jay Stephens. "We decline to lend any credence to an inquiry that lacks credibility and should be promptly closed." They were backed by the House leadership, which sponsored a task force that found nothing amiss. "There was not credible evidence that any Member of the House of Representatives violated any rule of the House or any laws," declared Charlie Rose, chairman of the House Administration Committee. Mr. Rostenkowski claimed "total exoneration."

Speaker Foley

A year later the election is over and an incoming Democratic administration took the unprecedented step of announcing the dismissal of all U.S. Attorneys. But the Post Office investigation continued under a career prosecutor, interim U.S. Attorney Ramsey Johnson. The former House Postmaster, Robert Rota, has now copped a plea while accusing Mr. Rostenkowski and a former Congressman of embezzlement. Another witness, former Rostenkowski aide James Smith, is quoted as saying Mr. Rota told him that he had swapped stamps for cash for Mr. Rostenkowski. The Ways and Means Chairman simply repeats his imperious denials.

Indeed, Mr. Rostenkowski is being treated within the Beltway almost as a figure of sympathy, a man trapped between old patronage and new ethics. Why would he care about a mere $21,000 in Post Office cash? Yet a profile of the chairman's finances in the June 5 Congressional Quarterly reveals a man who long ago blurred all distinctions between his private and public lives, between personal and campaign income. In only the first two-and-a-half months of 1990, CQ reports, Mr. Rostenkowski charged his campaign and a PAC he controls $4,837 for restaurant dinners alone.

As for Mr. Foley, he too dismissed reports about his sweetheart stock purchases when they first came to light in 1988. He did so again last month when they were expanded upon by Roll Call. Only after this page publicized them, amid Chairman Rostenkowski's problems, did the speaker take action to limit his profits. Mr. Foley now says he's severing ties with friend Peter de Roetth to preserve "the integrity" of his office. Yet this still leaves open questions about the motives of the big investment banks who issued "hot stocks" to Mr. de Roetth, who could then pass them along to Mr. Foley.

Now, both Mr. Rostenkowski and Mr. Foley must be presumed innocent, but does anyone doubt what political uproar there'd be if similar events surrounded, say, someone in the Reagan White House? A special prosecutor would already be empaneled, amid cries of "coverup." Indeed, in the House Post Office investigation, the U.S. Attorney's office has already asked about files that are missing from records turned over to prosecutors, including Mr. Rota's correspondence. We are waiting for someone to compare this to Fawn Hall's "shredding" of documents for Ollie North.

And if these were Republican White House officials, the record would be scoured for possible criminal violations. Mr. Foley never bothered to report that his investment adviser waived a usual 1% advisory fee that he now says he'll pay retroactively; was this an improper gift under House rules? This, after all, is a standard that Mr. Foley and his fellow Democrats have enforced for others. They unleashed "special prosecutors" on their enemies, then went on TV to expound on public "integrity."

We would like to see further investigation. How many other Congressmen got hot stocks, for example? But who would conduct such an investigation? We scarcely need another Congressional self-whitewash like Mr. Rose's Post Office "task force." The SEC is beholden to Congress for its budget. With the administration beholden to both Mr. Foley and Mr. Rostenkowski for its budget deal, would Webster Hubbell at Justice head the probe?

Dan Rostenkowski

Well, Mr. Johnson could show that the fix isn't in by actually requiring Mr. Rostenkowski to appear before the grand jury and take the Fifth in person, an unpleasantry he was spared by Mr. Stephens. Meanwhile, the citizens of the nation can ponder whether our system has somehow bred a new aristocracy, whether the kings of Congress consider themselves above the law.

Real Danger In Rosty Affair Is Prosecutor Abuse

By ALBERT R. HUNT

WASHINGTON—Jay Stephens was more omnipresent here last week than David Gergen or Newt Gingrich.

Tuesday night he was on ABC's "Nightline," predicting that Rep. Dan Rostenkowski would be indicted on an alleged cash-for-stamps scandal; he also charged that the sum of money involved was much larger than had been reported. The next night he appeared on CNN's "Crossfire" to peddle a similar line.

Then, on Thursday, Mr. Stephens privately huddled with congressional Republicans and staffers, as the GOP unsuccessfully sought release of still-secret testimony from last year's House probe into the Rostenkowski matter; the current U.S. attorney opposed the release, warning it could jeopardize his investigation.

This might all be perfectly routine if Jay Stephens were an elected official or even a political strategist. He's neither.

Instead, he's the former U.S. attorney for the District of Columbia who launched the Rostenkowski investigation several years ago. He's also an aspirant for the Republican Senate nomination in Virginia next year. There's a very clear correlation between these two facts.

"Jay Stephens's comments were inappropriate for any former prosecutor; it was outrageous and unprofessional," charges Joseph di Genova, who served as the U.S. attorney here under President Reagan. "Former U.S. attorneys shouldn't be running around politicizing cases." Stephens also was talking about information he got from the investigation; that should never pass from the lips of a former U.S. attorney when a case is still under investigation." (Mr. di Genova represented Rep. Austin Murphy, once a target of the same investigation, but apparently no longer.)

Whatever the Rostenkowski case says about political mores, it also says a lot about prosecutorial abuse. In what is an increasing pattern in these cases, Mr. Stephens and other prosecutors have engaged in a pattern of leaks and innuendoes aimed at undermining someone who has yet to be charged.

Last December, for example, three of Rep. Rostenkowski's aides were subpoenaed to appear before a grand jury; within a week, this was reported by the Associated Press. Earlier last month his daughters were subpoenaed to testify in the grand jury probe. The substance of what they were asked soon surfaced in the Chicago papers. There were only three possible sources: the daughters, their lawyers or the government. The odds that it wasn't the latter are somewhat greater than the New York Mets' chances of winning the World Series.

The most egregious abuse came this week, fittingly from Mr. Stephens. When asked about using privileged information to discredit his old target, the former U.S. attorney first asks to talk "off the record." When turned down, he then insists he never prejudged Mr. Rostenkowski.

Here, Mr. Prosecutor, is what you said on "Nightline," when asked by Ted Koppel if an indictment of the congressman was inevitable: "My sense is it's simply a matter of time at this point." That's not prejudging?

Then when asked why the powerful lawmaker would commit a crime for the reported meager $21,000, Mr. Stephens insisted the actual amount might instead range as high as "hundreds of thousands of dollars." In an interview Mr. Stephens insists he wasn't using information he gathered as prosecutor of this case before he was replaced this spring. Instead, he claims that his statement was based on magazine and newspaper articles; even if true, he probably leaked a lot of that information in the first place.

Mr. Stephens attributes Mr. di Genova's criticism to bad blood between the two former Republican U.S. attorneys. Yet other criminal-law experts concur. "Stephens's conduct was highly irresponsible," says Seth Waxman, a knowledgeable criminal defense lawyer. When Mr. Stephens is asked to suggest a legal expert to defend his actions, he can't.

Mr. Stephens, who clearly has been using information collected while on the public payroll, is skating on ethical and perhaps even legal thin ice. By law, the Justice Department says disclosures in criminal cases "should include only incontrovertible, factual matters and should not include subjective observations." The Washington bar forbids a prosecutor from "extrajudicial comments which serve to heighten condemnation of the accused."

I've covered Danny Rostenkowski for more than 20 years; I like him. Yet I'm ambivalent. One can't but be struck when former patronage pals, such as House Postmaster Robert Rota, say they paid off the powerful lawmaker—even if they're saying it to save their own skins. And as David Rogers and Jeffrey Birnbaum reported in the Journal last week, Rep. Rostenkowski is a product of an old school of politics that tolerated many practices that are deemed unacceptable today.

But it's also puzzling why this very smart politician would have risked everything for such penny-ante stuff. Moreover, last year Mr. Rostenkowski could have retired, walking away with over $1 million in leftover campaign contributions and, as a former congressman, almost surely escaping any prosecution in connection with the post office.

But there's a larger issue here more disturbing than his guilt or innocence: Mr. Stephens and his cronies have systematically sought to poison the environment for Rep. Rostenkowski to receive a fair hearing. That threatens Danny Rostenkowski. It also threatens me and you.

Mr. Hunt is the Journal's Washington bureau chief.

A man of principle

Lawyer walked straight and narrow as others in House Post Office bowed to scam

By Stephen W. Huber and Laura Vozzella
Fort Worth Star-Telegram

ARLINGTON — His family and friends know Arlington lawyer Paul Tomme as a principled man who plays by the rules and thinks before he speaks.

His sister says he was born a grown-up, a stick in the mud.

"We used to tease Paul about being born 30 years old because he was always so grown up," said his sister, Mildred Jane Stanbery, 37, of Fort Worth.

But she said yesterday that she has grown to appreciate that quality.

"He just never seemed to make the mistakes that we did or fall into the childhood problems that I did," Stanbery said. "He's mature beyond his years."

Mature, and unusually honest, if federal investigators looking into a House Post Office postage stamp scam are to be believed. For two years, recently released federal reports indicated, a scam involving House members in which postage stamp vouchers were converted to cash was stalled because Tomme, a new supervisor of accounts at the time, couldn't be trusted to assist the scheme.

Tomme's former boss, Robert Rota, the former head of the House Post Office, recently pleaded guilty to embezzlement and conspiracy in connection with the scam.

"I've never been glad before to be called untrustworthy, but I guess in this instance I am," Tomme said yesterday.

Were it up to him, the friends and family of the 34-year-old Fort Worth native might be the only ones who know that. But he has been thrust into the limelight for something investigators say he did not do: cheat the taxpayers when others about him allegedly did.

"There's a certain amount of coincidence to this," Tomme said. "I didn't ask for this kind of limelight. The post office job is what triggered all of the publicity."

The revelation that Tomme was apparently above the corruption that riddled the office — if published accounts and Rota's statements can be believed — confirms what friends and relatives already knew: Tomme is considered an honest man.

Arlington Mayor Richard Greene, who met Tomme after he joined the law firm of Cribbs & McFarland in 1990, said the revelations also confirmed what he already knew.

"His integrity and straight-arrow character is immediately obvious," Greene said. "You only have to know him a little while to realize he is a no-nonsense type of guy."

Tomme declined to speak specifically about the House Post Office. But in no uncertain terms, Tomme distanced himself from any scandal, or even knowing that one existed. He said no one ever asked him to do anything illegal while he was there.

"No one ever did — no congressman, no officer [of the House], nobody," he said. "I was fortunate enough to work under the sponsorship of Jim Wright, who never would have asked me to do something like that."

Tomme said he would have "summarily refused" such an offer had one been made. That notion was no surprise.

"He didn't take a lot of discipline," said Tomme's mother, Barbara, 71, of Fort Worth. "He played by the rules. Whatever the school rules were, whatever the house rules were."

Tomme (pronounced Tommy) was born Aug. 20, 1958, to Barbara and J.D. Tomme, a dentist and local Democratic heavyweight. It was his father's political ties to and friendship with Fort Worth politicos and future House Speaker Jim Wright and Rep. Olin "Tiger" Teague that originally led Paul Tomme to Washington.

He admits that he got the job from Teague as a political favor because his father had actively campaigned for Teague.

"I loved it," Tomme said. "I caught a serious case of the Potomac fever. The internships are great things for a college student."

He heard Sens. George McGovern, Howard Baker and Edward Kennedy speak and met Rep. Thomas "Tip" O'Neill. He watched both House and Senate sessions in action. The experience was a boost to the ego of the then-teen-age Texan.

"I don't deny that. It's pretty heady stuff for a 19-year-old, for anyone who's interested in politics," Tomme said.

Tomme attended Tanglewood Elementary and McLean Middle School in Fort Worth before graduating in 1976 from Paschal High School. He ranked 286 in a class of 580, according to school officials. He got his undergraduate and law degrees from Baylor University in Waco and a master's degree in business administration from George Washington University in Washington, D.C.

Included in his curriculum during his high school years were four years of band (he played the trumpet), creative writing and an aviation course, which whetted his appetite for his true passion, flying.

He is licensed to fly single and multiprop planes and has flown about 400 hours so far. In a flash, he can recall his first solo flight.

"May 29, 1988," he said proudly. "Any pilot can remember the date of his first solo flight. All my life I've had an interest in flying."

His piloting skills have taken him to Colorado, various Texas destinations and even the Bahamas for scuba diving adventures.

"The whole purpose of flying is to get a different perspective of the Earth," he said.

Tomme, a quiet, cautious man, indulges in adventurous pastimes, such as flying rented airplanes to Midwest hunting expeditions and to Colorado for skiing. But there's no contradiction as far as Barbara Tomme can see.

"He pilots just like he lives: very methodically," she said, noting that he makes an exhaustive check of the airplane before takeoff. "You might as well not be in a hurry if you're flying with him."

Jim Maibach, a friend, flew home with Tomme in October after hunting for pheasants in Kansas.

"I feel safe with him because he is so conscientious about doing it by the book and the correct way," said Maibach, president of Young Men For Arlington, a political-civic organization to which Tomme belongs.

Tomme and his two siblings "grew up licking envelopes," their mother said, because their father, J.D. Tomme, served as Tarrant County Democratic chairman for several years.

Tarrant County Judge Tom Vandergriff remembers a young Tomme tagging along to civic activities with his father, who died in 1990.

"Even at a young age, he was certainly interested in government," said Vandergriff, who recalls discussing local and national events with Tomme when he was a teenager. "He did seem to be extremely well-read and well-informed. He's obviously very bright, very forthcoming, energetic. I, of course, would expect him to be of the highest character. I would call him simply an outstanding young man."

Lawyer Theodore Mack, whose Fort Worth law firm hired Tomme, described Tomme as a smart, hard-working lawyer who seemed bent on a career in public service.

"Government service seemed to be an ideal career for him," said Mack, who predicts that Tomme will move in and out of government work throughout his life. "He is scrupulously honest with a fine inherent sense of what's appropriate, moral and ethical."

Gordon Gray, a former appellate judge for whom Tomme worked, was especially taken with the young lawyer.

"Paul has tremendous integrity and intelligence," Gray said. "He's an industrious and a fine lawyer — a fantastic lawyer. I never have heard anyone say anything bad about Paul."

The death of his father, particularly difficult on Tomm

After leaving the House fice job and a later one as with the House Banking mittee on Financial Ins which investigated the sa loan scandal, Tomme va to return to "Go Texas, simply becau state and his family. enough of Washing to spend more time

Dan Rostenkowski is drawing the heat. But several other Chicago congressmen are nothing for the city to brag about.

Let's start with the new darling of the media and Washington liberals, Democratic Rep. Bobby Rush.

Mr. Rush is viewed as a glamorous figure because he was once a top Black Panther, the founder of the Illinois chapter of that scary organization.

But a grown man can't spend his whole life wearing a beret and talking tough. So he moved on to business and politics.

He went into insurance and says that he did quite well. And he became part of the Harold Washington movement and was elected to the City Council.

Now he is a member of Congress and is an intriguing figure because of his transformation from paramilitary radical to mainstream, establishment politician.

So his many admirers choose to ignore a part of his past that borders on the disgraceful.

For many years, Mr. Rush was a deadbeat. When he and his wife split, he was ordered to pay child support.

Maybe I am old-fashioned. No, not maybe. I am. So I believe that when you father children, you are financially responsible for them.

Apparently Mr. Rush does not share this view because he fell thousands and thousands of dollars behind. His wife would go to court, the judge would issue an order, and Mr. Rush would ignore it.

His wife had to live, so she went on public aid. That meant that Bobby Rush was letting the taxpayers support his family.

So eventually Mr. Rush was sued by the state for the thousands of dollars given to his wife.

Mr. Rush was not some ghetto illiterate, lacking job skills. He's a college graduate and, as he has boasted, was good at the insurance business. And few aldermen are poverty-stricken.

But he ducked his child support and let the taxpayers support his family.

Now he is a member of Congress, deciding how billions of dollars of other people's money should be spent.

If there is a congressional committee having to do with deadbeat daddies, he should be a member. He has the credentials.

Then there is Rep. Mel Reynolds, another Democratic newcomer. He has the distinction of being the only rookie on Mr. Rostenkowski's powerful Ways and Means Committee (also known as the Take It and Spend It Gang).

Mr. Reynolds also has an unusual background. He was born to a poor family in the South and grew up in public housing. But he hit the books, got through school and has the distinction of having been a Rhodes Scholar.

After various academic jobs, he ran for Congress against goofy Gus Savage and lost. But he kept at it and last year he won.

Mr. Reynolds has many admirable qualities, which he gladly recites at length.

However, he does have what might be considered a character defect. He doesn't like to pay his bills.

He's being sued by at least eight creditors for more than $50,000. Judges have ordered him to pay up, but so far, the creditors say, he has ignored the court orders.

And what bugs the people to whom he owes money is that he hasn't even made an effort to work out some sort of payment plan.

One banker is quoted by the Associated Press as saying: "You have no idea how many lawyers we wore out chasing this man. He could have paid us off a dollar a week and we would have taken it. He's just ignored his responsibility."

He still owes $14,000 for a student loan he used to attend Harvard.

A contractor wants $12,000 for remodeling work he did on Mr. Reynolds' campaign office four years ago.

An airline says he stiffed them for more than $9,000.

When a longtime adviser and friend recently told Mr. Reynolds that he should pay his bills, Mr. Reynolds flew into a rage, told off the friend and slammed down the phone. They haven't spoken since.

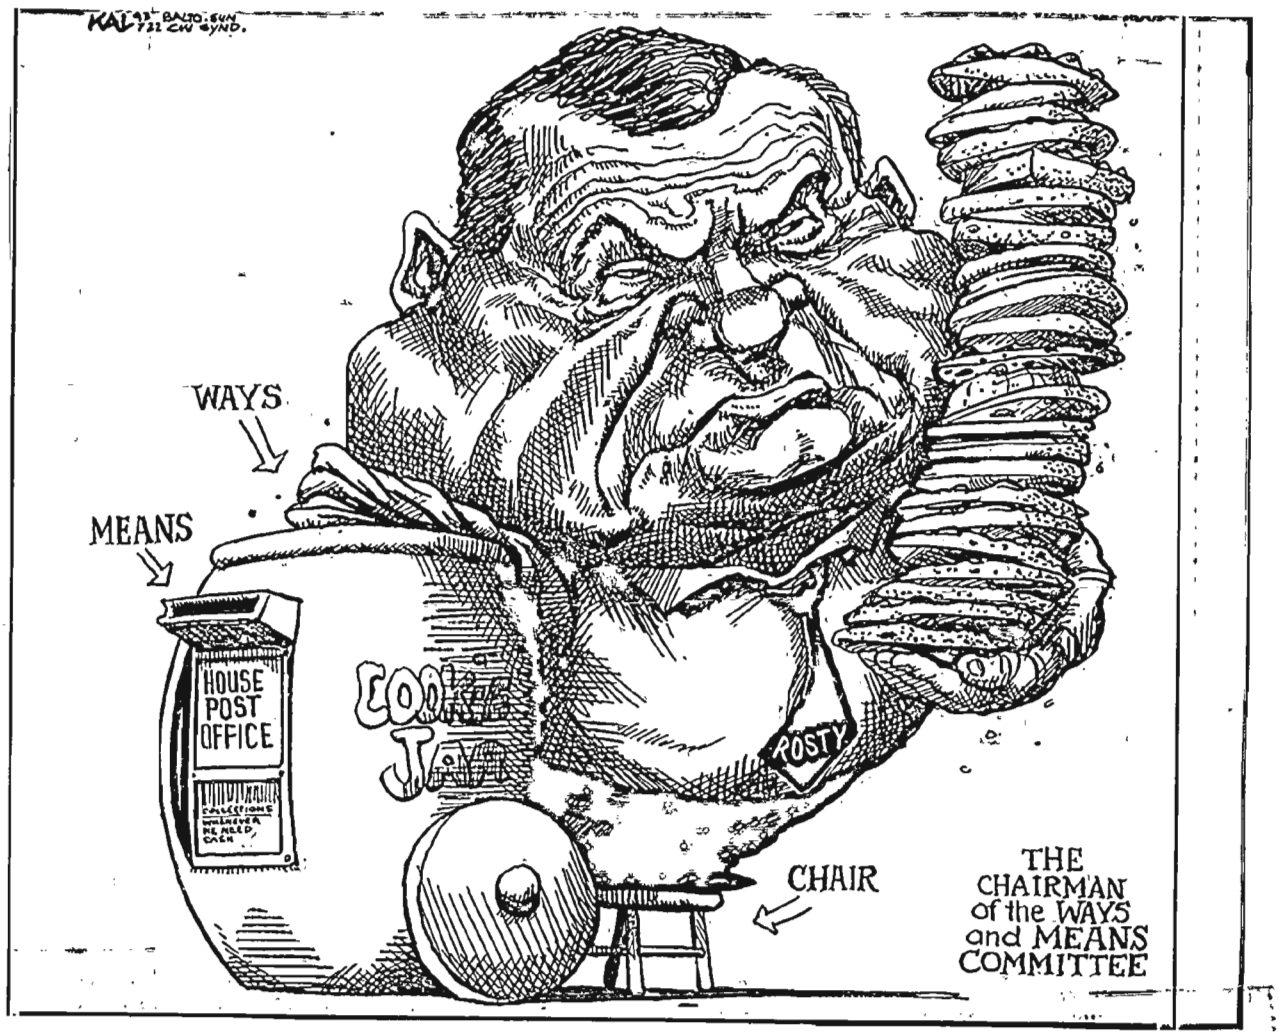
In a more restrained mood, he told AP, "When you're an African-American... instead of people waiting to give you a chance to pay, they sue you."

That's probably true. But if you are a Greek-American, a Polish-American or a Bulgarian-American and stiff the bill collector, you're going to get sued. That's just the nature of our economic system. People like getting paid for their goods or services.

As a matter of fact, if you fail to pay the new taxes that Mr. Reynolds' congressional committee has created, the IRS will not only sue you, they just might walk in and grab everything you own. And that will happen even if you aren't sure what goods or services are being provided by the federal government. And if you didn't order them in the first place.

Now that Mr. Reynolds is making $133,600 a year as a congressman (President Clinton says that makes him one of the "rich"), he says he will soon get around to paying his bills. That's good. The rich really should pay their college tuition.

Finally, we have Rep. Luis Gutierrez, another Democratic alderman elected to Congress last year after a district was drawn that looked like a reptile, so Mr. Gutierrez could pick up enough Hispanic votes to win.



Mr. Gutierrez is part of a group that wants to erect a statue of Pedro Albizu Campos in Humboldt Park. The statue will be a symbol of Puerto Rican pride.

I believe in ethnic pride. But I'm not sure about the late Mr. Campos. True, he was a leader in the movement for an independent Puerto Rico, which is OK with me.

On the other hand, he was believed to be part of a plot to assassinate President Harry Truman and a shooting that wounded five congressmen.

Maybe they should put up a statue of Luis Gutierrez instead. At least he pays his bills.

The Post sets aside 12 years of standards of ethical conduct

There was smiling President Clinton in a photograph on the front page of the newspaper the week before last, and who should be sitting next to him but Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, a.k.a. "Congressman A"?

Congressman A, according to the government information filed along with the guilty plea of former House Postmaster Robert Rota, was on the receiving end of funds Mr. Rota embezzled for favored House members. Mr. Rostenkowski has emphatically denied any wrongdoing or ethical breaches, he has been charged with nothing, and he is certainly entitled to the presumption of innocence. But Mr. Clinton is the chief executive of the United States. Thus he is the boss of the boss of the people who will be prosecuting — or who will not be prosecuting — Mr. Rostenkowski.

And Mr. Rostenkowski, as chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, is the principal House negotiator in the conference reconciling Senate and House budgets. The president has a clear interest in getting an outcome closest to his liking as soon as he can. Mr. Rostenkowski has been carrying the administration's water, so much so that the leading Senate Democrat in the conference, Daniel P. Moynihan, complained that the House and the administration must be willing to compromise.

Now, do you really have to be a Republican — and thus on the receiving end of numerous conflict-of-interest charges and independent counsel investigations over the past 12 years — to think there is something wrong with this?

Maybe you do. The Washington Post, for example, has pronounced the process of this investigation "just fine." A July 21 editorial following the plea agreement with Mr. Rota said, "on the record so far, the Democratic Justice Department seems to be proceeding about as it ought to proceed with regard to this senior Democrat: Regular order, no pulling of punches." The editorial went on to muse about the independent counsel law, which expired last year, and the efforts to renew it and possibly make it applicable to members of Congress. "Can a party in power be trusted to prosecute its senior members in the legislative branch any more than the executive? The current case is a kind of test; so far it confirms us in our view that the answer is yes, that the regular prosecutorial system can be trusted and the act should be limited to the executive branch."

Wow. All that vindication of the Democratic congressional leadership point of view just from a plea agreement with Mr. Rota — not an indictment of Mr. Rostenkowski, mind you, but of Mr. Rota.

Jay Stephens, the U.S. attorney for the District of Columbia before the purge of all U.S. attorneys conducted by Janet Reno shortly after she took office, has raised serious questions about the extent to which this investigation has proceeded according to "regular order" since he left. He has said that the case is months behind where it would have been had he been left to finish it.

In vindicating the Democratic administration, The Post does not even find it necessary to address what interest the administration might have in the timing of the case. The fact is that the utility of Mr. Rostenkowski to the administration is now very high. When the conference is finished with its work, that utility is diminished. Presumably, senior officials in the Justice Department — Mr. Clinton's appointees, that is — have reviewed the House post office case. And presumably these reviews have taken time, as the files spend a week on this desk and then a week on that desk. This is not to suggest that anything improper motivated these reviews, that they were deliberately dilatory. It is just rather difficult to imagine The Post taking so sanguine a view of a Republican administration that it would pass over such a matter without comment.

Now, we might wish to engage in an exercise of imagining a totally unscrupulous president (LBJ, only worse) and a totally unscrupulous congressman (pick any ABSCAM convict) in an analogous position. That president might indeed wish to embrace the congressman quite publicly. That would be the president's little reminder that the fate of the congressman rests in the hands of a president who might, just might, be willing to call off an indictment. Now imagine that the president isn't unscrupulous but the congressman is. Maybe under those circumstances the congressman bows and scrapes to do the bidding of the president in the mistaken view that the course of the investigation might change.

All of this is the sort of thing that used to occur all the time to The Post. No more. Democrats, evidently, are just better people than Republicans.

THE TROUBLE WITH ROSTY

His post-office scandal could disrupt Clinton's legislative ambitions

By JOHN GREENWALD

The 18-term Chicago Democrat faces a possible indictment in the autumn of his career MOLECULES STILL SHIFT WHENEVER Dan Rostenkowski walks into a room. Everyone looks up and shrinks a little to make space for one of the most powerful lawmakers in Congress. But while the chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee should be in his glory as he oversees the passage of President Clinton's tax bill, he is stuck beneath the darkest cloud of his career. The prospect that Rostenkowski may soon be indicted and stripped of his chairmanship has placed his ability to help Clinton in serious doubt. And the potential loss of Rostenkowski's deft political skills makes some Democrats fear that the rest of the President's legislative agenda could be in trouble. "We're worried about what happens down the road with health care, the North American Free Trade Agreement and all the other things we have to get through Ways and Means," a senior Administration official concedes.

The threat of prosecution grew more ominous for Rostenkowski last week, when a former House postmaster Robert Rota pleaded guilty to embezzlement and indicated that the 18-term Chicago Democrat had been involved. Rota said he had helped lawmakers illegally swap stamp vouchers for cash for nearly 20 years. While he named the most prominent offenders only as Congressman A and Congressman B, sources close to the prosecution identified Congressman A as Rostenkowski and Congressman B as former Pennsylvania Representative Joe Kolter, who was defeated last year. Rota indicated that Rostenkowski had used vouchers to embezzle $21,300 over a six-year period, but it remained unclear whether the money was used for office or personal use. Separately, federal investigators are still probing charges that Rostenkowski converted hundreds of thousands of dollars in campaign funds to his personal use, partly by cashing the checks at the post-office window. Asserted Rostenkowski at a Saturday press conference: "I have engaged in no illegal or unethical conduct. I'm frustrated and angry at these allegations."

The disclosures rattled Rostenkowski's colleagues and constituents. While the Ways and Means chairman often comes off as gruff and arrogant on camera, he is a Washington institution. "By golly, I've known the guy for more than 25 years," said House minority leader Robert Michel. "I can't believe he'd do any such thing—it's just not like our Danny."

The lengthy probe has dampened Rostenkowski's spirits and raised the possibility that even if he is cleared, the 65-year-old Congressman will quit next year. "This has all been very difficult for him and his family," says Raymond McGrath, a close friend and former Congressman. "They've subpoenaed his daughters, many of his friends and his secretaries in Chicago." When people ask Rostenkowski how he's doing these days, he's likely to shoot back, "How the hell do you think I'm doing?"

The disclosures last week set up a race between a possible indictment of Rostenkowski and completion of the budget bill now before a 14-member House-Senate conference subcommittee. Sources close to the U.S. Attorney's office said an indictment could come in late August, after Congress adjourns for its summer recess.

The widening scandal only seemed to strengthen Rostenkowski's resolve to help push through the budget measure. "He will be around to finish up his chores," says Bill Frenzel, a former Republican member of the Ways and Means Committee who is now with the Brookings Institution. "He sees this conference as one of the most important jobs of his life, and that's the way he'll handle it."

That could help explain why the conferees seemed to be moving more swiftly toward a deal last week than the White House had anticipated. Braced by a speech in which Clinton declared, "We were elected to end gridlock," the lawmakers agreed to raise the tax rate on corporations from 34% to 35% and to put the lion's share of new personal taxes on households making more than $140,000 a year. But many issues remain unresolved. Among them: decisions on how much to boost the gasoline tax and how much to cut Medicare and other entitlement programs.

The real test for Clinton's legislative agenda will come if Rostenkowski is indicted and steps down. His chairmanship would then go to Sam Gibbons, a 73-year-old Florida Democrat who is lightly regarded by other members of the pivotal and fractious committee. If Gibbons does become chairman, true leadership of the committee could quietly pass to House majority leader Dick Gephardt and Speaker Tom Foley, who would work behind the scenes to crack heads and push the Clinton agenda. But neither Foley nor Gephardt nor Gibbons could be nearly as influential with Ways and Means members as the burly, steak-chomping chairman who has ruled the committee for 13 years. —Reported by Margaret Carlson, Michael Duffy and Nancy Traver/Washington

Rostenkowski Reeling

Congress: Prosecutors take aim at the passing world of backslaps and knowing winks

BY JONATHAN ALTER

"NO MAN HAS EVER GROWN MORE IN Congress," former House speaker Tip O'Neill once said of Rep. Dan Rostenkowski. As rumors of indictment swarm over the powerful congressman, the accuracy of O'Neill's assessment is directly at issue. Rostenkowski was reared in a Chicago political culture where petty corruption was a way of life. The U.S. House to which he was elected in 1958 was no Sunday school either. The practice of exchanging extra stamps for "going home" pocket money—the core of the current allegations against Rostenkowski—was legal and not uncommon as recently as the early 1970s. After Watergate, standards changed. The question is, did Rosty change, too? Or did his comfort in that beefy world of backslaps and knowing winks, of loose cash and patronage hacks, take him over the line?

Either way, the chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee took one in the gut last week. Just as he sat down with Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan to structure the big House-Senate budget compromise, a former House postmaster named Robert V. Rota pleaded guilty to embezzlement and conspiracy charges, alleging that he helped "Congressman A" (identified as Rostenkowski) steal at least $21,000 over six years. The congressman may also be charged with improperly cashing campaign contributions at the House post office, among other offenses. Although Rostenkowski defiantly attacked the allegations as "unfair, false, baseless," Rota's guilty plea sharply increased the odds of an indictment within a few weeks and a showy criminal trial that will take the whole institution of Congress down several more notches, if that's possible.

A furious House Speaker Tom Foley pounded the table in his chambers, defending the integrity of his colleague. And Foley had his own, less serious embarrassment: reports that he made $100,000 in profits when his broker bought initial public offerings of stocks not usually available to ordinary investors. NEWSWEEK has learned that while the speaker broke no rules, he will now put his holdings in a blind trust.

Also last week, the Chicago Sun-Times published an interview with a Rota subordinate, James C. Smith, a patronage worker of a Chicago ward boss in Congress.

Rostenkowski's chiseling isn't in dispute. For years he has accepted steak dinners and golf junkets from lobbyists with business before the Ways and Means Committee, an eyebrow-raising but legal practice for which he makes no apologies. He's used campaign funds for cars, insurance, even hundreds of golf sweaters for friends. Old-fashioned nepotism is second nature: his sisters turned out to be the landlords for both campaign and district-office headquarters in Chicago; two of his daughters, the Chicago Tribune reported last week, were put on the Chicago Board of Trade payroll by a crony at the same time they were employed as airline-flight attendants.

No one on the Rostenkowski side is talking about his defense, but the outlines are emerging. Rota, who is not charged with taking any cash for himself, and Smith will no doubt be portrayed as sycophantic small fry trying to save their skins. Rota will be depicted as a liar (he earlier denied improprieties); Smith is being described by a Rostenkowski aide as an eccentric who stored cash in a pea package in his refrigerator. Perhaps the biggest mystery is what Rostenkowski's longtime assistant, Virginia Fletcher, told the grand jury.

The politics of the Rostenkowski case are especially bitter. The Democrats point out that former U.S. attorney Jay Stephens, the Republican who initiated the probe, is now riding an anti-Congress theme in his race against Oliver North for a Virginia Senate seat. Even some of Stephens's old colleagues at the Justice Department believe it was highly inappropriate for him to go on "Nightline" last week to speculate about Rostenkowski's indictment.

Stephens alleges that the Clinton administration bought Rostenkowski (and itself) time by firing him as U.S. attorney last spring. But the evidence isn't there. The attorney general replaced 91 other U.S. attorneys at the same time as Stephens, which is standard operating procedure in a new administration.

For all of the hand-wringing, the loss of Rostenkowski wouldn't by itself deal a grievous blow to the Clinton program. The budget, due to be voted on soon, will likely be completed before any possible indictment. And that is the last major tax legislation (Rostenkowski's specialty) expected for several years. Although his clout would help President Clinton on health-care and other bills, it isn't indispensable. Both Rep. Sam Gibbons and Rep. Charles Rangel, the two candidates to replace him, would be far weaker chairmen. But Majority Leader Richard Gephardt might be brought on to the committee to add party discipline.

All the same, the demise of Danny Rostenkowski would mark a major passage. He's a test for everything we believe about regulars versus reformers, arm-twisters versus policy wonks, steak and Scotch versus salad and Saratoga. ■

Who owed his job to Rostenkowski and will likely be a second major witness against him. According to Smith, the stamps rarely changed hands. Rostenkowski simply signed an expense-account voucher for stamps that Smith converted into cash. The first time he says he witnessed the alleged scheme, in 1989, "I was no doubt taken aback when I saw his [Rostenkowski's] name on the [$2,000] voucher. I couldn't believe it was him."

Most Democrats on Capitol Hill still can't believe it's him. They whisper that an aide must have signed his name. And beyond condemning press and prosecutors for frying him publicly before he has even been formally charged, the pro-Rostenkowski forces point to the amounts of money allegedly involved. If Rostenkowski was greedy, the logic goes, he would have taken advantage of a loophole that allowed longtime members of Congress retiring in 1992 to keep their accumulated campaign funds for their own personal use. In Rostenkowski's case, that figure was more than $1 million, which he forfeited by running for re-election.

This argument ignores the history of Chicago politics. Former alderman Dick Simpson, a reformer who lost to Rostenkowski in 1992, points out that 15 of the last 18 Chicago aldermen sent to jail have been convicted of accepting bribes of less than $1,000. "The style has always been to steal in little increments," Simpson says. "And Rostenkowski's pattern is that

Short list. Members of the House of Representatives can relax: Insiders say that the alleged stamps-for-cash embezzlement scam at the House post office (story, Page 20) is not likely to entangle many lawmakers in criminal wrongdoing. While Dan Rostenkowski, the influential chairman of Ways and Means, has been implicated, "this is not the House bank situation, where you had a long list of rascals," says one source familiar with the inquiry. As for the testimony provided by Robert Rota, the former House postmaster, much of it concerns improprieties that are ancient by Washington standards. And although some Republicans are howling for release of still-secret records of last year's internal House investigation of the post office, Daniel Swillinger, the GOP counsel on the task force that conducted the probe, says: "There's no bomb in there."

House postal probe detours to the bedroom

By Paul M. Rodriguez
THE WASHINGTON TIMES

It might be called "Sex, Lies and Audio Tape" were it not already copyrighted as "The House Post Office Scandal."

The unfolding story has all the elements for a good movie about the inside deals among the elite and powerful of Congress and the wanna-bes who help run the Hill's political machine.

The latest chapter finds federal prosecutors looking for information on who's been sleeping with whom, according to current and former congressional and federal law enforcement officials and lobbyists.

"They wanted to know things that had nothing to do with what they're supposed to be looking into," said one source.

"The prosecutors are looking for dirt on people," said another source close to the probe. "You know, like mistresses, lovers, drinking problems, any drug habits, things like that."

"They want to know everything on the members, on all of them [involved] with the post office," said a third.

"I told them [the prosecutors] what I've heard about some of the people," the third source said. But "I'm not going to tell those snoopy [prosecutors] some things because I just don't think it's any of their business."

"I'll tell you what," said one source, "they sure do know a lot.... They had some of the answers already and I guess they were just asking me to see if I had heard or knew the same thing."

Earlier, prosecutors and a federal grand jury looked into allegations of cocaine sales, embezzlement and illegal cashing of checks under the guise of stamp purchases.

Secret audio tapes — wiretapping of private conversations authorized by federal law enforcement officials — and new testimony from some of the players, such as Robert V. Rota, the former House postmaster who pleaded guilty last month to embezzlement, are expected to help confirm reports that several people on and off Capitol Hill conspired to hide the truth about illegal activities at the post office going back to at least 1980.

Individuals still working in the House may have perjured themselves and encouraged others to lie in testimony before a House task force and before the grand jury, according to the sources.

Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, Illinois Democrat and chairman of the tax-writing Ways and Means Committee, and Rep. Austin Murphy, Pennsylvania Democrat, have been implicated in a money-laundering scam, as has former Rep. Joe Kolter, Pennsylvania Democrat.

All three have denied wrongdoing and invoked their Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination when called to testify before the grand jury.

According to the sources, the grand jury has been hearing "some pretty incredible" testimony about a number of current and former lawmakers, as well as current and former senior staffers and high-powered lobbyists who allegedly used the post office for illegal purposes.

Some of the allegations that have gotten little attention from the media involve illegal campaign contributions funneled through the post office and the now-closed House bank.

"They [the prosecutors] have all they ever needed to know to hang all of them," said one source. "Rota has been spilling his guts for weeks now" since prosecutors agreed to allow him to plead guilty to three misdemeanors in return for his cooperation.

Helping prosecutors search for information is a federal task force of FBI agents, Internal Revenue Service agents, U.S. Capitol Police and U.S. Postal Inspection Service officers, along with local police and crime commission officials in several states.

While Mr. Rostenkowski has attracted most of the attention, witnesses who testified before the grand jury have implicated other congressmen, former members and staffers. Investigators have requested massive amounts of records in pursuing those leads.

"It has put a tremendous pressure on us," said one congressional source familiar with the requests. "It causes confusion and worry" when investigators show up, another agreed.

"They're moving up the food chain," said one source familiar with the grand jury's deliberations. "It's just a matter of time as they go from the little fish to the medium fish and then the bigger fish."

"All I know is that this thing's not going away and it's not stopping at Rostenkowski," said another source close to the probe.

As one former federal source asked, "Can the videotape be far behind?"

House post office staffer told FBI about suspicions in 1979

By Michael Tackett and William Gaines
TRIBUNE STAFF WRITERS

WASHINGTON—More than a decade ago, Pat Saylor, a secretary at the House post office, called the FBI with a startling allegation: At least four members of Congress were involved in a scheme to trade cash for stamps.

She named names. She described how members did it. She didn't know everything, but the FBI treated her story seriously and assigned agents to investigate.

Eventually, however, two of her superiors contradicted her story. For that and other reasons, lawyers at the Justice Department dropped the matter.

What the lawyers didn't know was that Saylor's bosses, Postmaster Robert Rota and Supervisor of Accounts Mary Bowman, weren't telling the truth.

Had the matter been pursued more vigorously, the cash for stamps scandal that dominates today's headlines and has implicated Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) in the embezzlement of $21,300 in federal funds might never have occurred. Rostenkowski has emphatically denied any wrongdoing.

Yet the allegations pose the most serious threat Rostenkowski phatically denied any wrongdoing.

Yet the allegations pose the most serious threat Rostenkowski has faced in four decades of public life. This time, it is Rota who is naming names and dates and places to the prosecutors. And this time, Rota has admitted that he participated in the earlier cover-up.

For Saylor the time to talk came in early August 1979.

For three years from her desk at the House post office, she had seen cash being funneled to members of Congress. She had seen one member actually come and get money. She had seen Rota shuffling vouchers and stamps, doing just about anything to keep members of Congress happy. And she was worried.

In September 1979, she went to FBI headquarters where agents interviewed her. In the first week of October, the FBI formally notified Rota that it was conducting an investigation.

On Oct. 17, a woman came to the post office and started to argue with Saylor on an unrelated matter. Saylor, who said she had never done anything like it before, stood and delivered a knock-down punch with her right hand.

People around the office laughed about it. The Capitol police sent two burly officers over to take a report and one of them asked Saylor "not to hit" him. But the punch would carry serious consequences.

Within a month, Saylor was fired. Saylor said she told Rota that she had talked to the FBI as she was leaving the job.

A letter from House Counsel Stanley Brand, who is now in private practice, said her behavior could not be tolerated and she would be barred forever from working on Capitol Hill. As a patronage employee, she had no recourse.

At the time, several sources said, FBI agents were disturbed that they were not allowed to conduct the inquiry.

Instead, after negotiations with Brand, it was decided that lawyers from the Justice Department's Public Integrity Section would interview Saylor, then several months later, Rota and his top assistant, Bowman.

As this story was unfolding, Justice Department lawyers were concentrating on a much larger criminal enterprise, the Abscam case, and sources said the House post office matter seemed quite small in comparison.

Still, Saylor stuck by her original account in her interview with Justice Department attorneys.

Rota and Bowman provided a completely different story. No congressmen were breaking the law, they said. The case quietly went away.

When Rota recently pleaded guilty to embezzlement and conspiracy in the cash-for-stamps case, and outlined a possible case against Rostenkowski, he acknowledged his deceit.

"After this successful cover-up," prosecutors later said, "Mr. Rota did not end the practice of giving cash to selected congressmen. On the contrary, during the early and mid-1980s, he continued to provide cash in exchange for vouchers and stamps to several members of Congress."

In the ensuing decade, Rota has now testified, he continued to engineer payments to members in the guise of stamp purchases. Bowman, who retired in 1987, said in an interview that in an atmosphere of fear and intimidation, patronage workers did what members asked them to do so they could keep their jobs.

"You did what you were told or you were replaced," Bowman said. "One person would tell you it was legal and the other would tell you it was a shady area."

What could have been stopped more than a decade ago, instead flourished, and, according to Rota's allegations, could bring down Rostenkowski.

Brand, who had heard the stories about cash-for-stamps more than 10 years before, was hired by Rostenkowski to defend him initially; then he was dismissed in favor of lawyer Robert Bennett. Repeated attempts to reach Brand for comment were unsuccessful.

Saylor has been questioned by the federal grand jury investigating the House post office case, in part to provide a foundation prosecutors hope to construct that the cash-for-stamps scandal persisted for at least 14 years.

The grand jury also questioned Saylor about Rostenkowski, but she testified that she had no specific knowledge of any cash-for-stamps transactions but she said that generally post office employees were expected to "do whatever (Rostenkowski's) office(s) wanted."

Saylor's most specific allegations were lodged against John Jenrette, the former South Carolina congressman convicted in the Abscam scandal.

She said that she saw Bowman process a voucher from Rota that provided $500 in cash for Jenrette, which Rota delivered to him near the floor of the House. Both Saylor and Bowman questioned Rota about it. Saylor said Rota later claimed Jenrette repaid the money and he demanded that Saylor watch him give the money back to Bowman.

Kenneth Robinson, Jenrette's lawyer, said that while his client was investigated for many things, he never heard of an allegation of theft of any kind from the post office.

Another former congressman implicated by Saylor's grand jury testimony was Fernand St Germain (D-R.I.). Contacted at his law office, he refused comment.

Behind the Hirings and Firings of a Defense Team

By Saundra Torry
Washington Post Staff Writer

Robert Bennett was in Boston attending college orientation with one of his daughters on July 23 when a call came from the office of House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) that the congressman wanted to see him. Bennett raced back to Washington and huddled for three hours with Rostenkowski, who earlier that week had watched the federal investigation of the alleged House Post Office embezzlement scheme take what for him was an ominous turn.

A few hours later, just shy of midnight, Bennett and his partner, Carl Rauh, were in as Rostenkowski's defense team. Two other prominent Washington lawyers, Judah Best and Stanley Brand, already were out.

The superficial explanation in news reports and legal scuttlebutt was that as talk of a possible Rostenkowski indictment mounted, the powerful Chicago congressman fired Brand, never known as a trial lawyer, and Best, who had been retained, the rumors went, to plea bargain with federal prosecutors. Then, Rostenkowski opted for Bennett, a gutsy, streetwise trial lawyer on the hottest winning streak in town.

While partly true—the congressman did want a trial lawyer—that explanation was too simplistic and ignored far too much. The case changed drastically on July 19, when former House postmaster Robert V. Rota pleaded guilty to helping several congressmen embezzle money from the House Post Office. Information contained in court papers indicated that Rostenkowski was one of those who allegedly received thousands in the scheme. The next night, former U.S. Attorney Jay Stephens, who had headed the office running the probe, was on ABC-TV's Nightline. Stephens renewed his charge that the Clinton administration had tried to stall the investigation for political reasons.

Aides to Rostenkowski, who for months had been battling Brand's strategy of no comment to the press, argued that the congressman had to get his story out, and not just for political survival. Every time Stephens yelled "politics," it diminished the chance that Justice Department officials would give the case a "meaningful review" when it came out of the U.S. attorney's office, lawyers familiar with the case argued.

Rostenkowski needed a defense lawyer who could go on attack both in the press and at the department, and many thought Bennett was that person. The morning after they were hired, Bennett and Rauh flanked Rostenkowski as he read a brief statement to the press, asserting his innocence.

BY RAY LUSTIG—THE WASHINGTON POST

There were other dynamics at work, too. Top politicians always "have 200 people telling them what they ought to do," said one veteran trial lawyer. "I bet somebody was whispering in his ear, 'This is the guy you need to get.' "

Indeed, as aides and friends pressed for a fresh legal team, the names of five trial lawyers came up repeatedly: Bennett, Brendan Sullivan and Reid Weingarten, all Washington talent; Dan Webb, the former U.S. Attorney in Chicago, now in private practice there; and New York lawyer Peter Fleming.

Had Weingarten been retained, it could have touched off a fuss. He is a close friend of D.C. Superior Court Judge Eric H. Holder Jr., just nominated as the next U.S. Attorney for D.C. But Weingarten, it turns out, had another conflict, and ultimately, he wasn't tapped.

As lawyers dissected the very public firing and hiring, some focused on why Rostenkowski originally turned to Brand and Best.

One lawyer familiar with the case said it was "nonsense" to believe Best was brought in to plea bargain. "This is not a case where you hire somebody to drive you to the funeral home," this lawyer said, adding that " 'Rosty' is not about to fold."

This lawyer said, "Judd was brought in as the gray-haired eminence, a tactician to come up with strategy . . . to defuse [the case] at the U.S. Attorney level and at Justice."

Best, admirers said, is known for obtaining good, creative deals for individual and corporate clients who want to avoid trial and for whom a deal is often a victory. Best's biggest wins—cases where he has blocked an indictment—are invisible, one colleague said, known only to his clients and the small coterie of lawyers in the same field.

But critics argue that Best can be too quick to plead clients out when a trial becomes inevitable. The allegations against Rostenkowski "might have to be duked out in the courtroom, and if you want a combatant, Bob [Bennett] has to be on your short list," one lawyer said.

Brand, hired by Rostenkowski last year when his troubles surfaced, was described by one admirer as a "tough, smart, politically savvy lawyer" who knows his way around the House of Representatives, where he was chief counsel for seven years. Brand and his partner, Abbe Lowell, a former prosecutor, have racked up an impressive record representing members of Congress with ethics or grand jury problems. But Lowell, for several reasons, did not get heavily involved in the Rostenkowski case, and he is the trial lawyer in that duo.

Brand had no comment last week. Best said he hopes for Rostenkowski's "complete vindication," adding that the congressman had obtained "two superb lawyers" in Bennett and Rauh. Best declined further comment.

Several lawyers chalked up the switch to human nature. Some clients blame the messenger for bad news. Others don't want to believe early on they will ever need a trial lawyer.

Lawyer-shopping among Washington's elite "is not an unusual phenomenon," said one famous lawyer.

According to this attorney, former FBI Director William H. Sessions in his final, fractious weeks in office reached out to at least a half dozen new lawyers, including the ever-present Bennett, Judith Richards Hope, Brendan Sullivan and Robert Strauss, as well as Michael Tigar, who teaches law at the University of Texas at Austin, and Seagal Wheatley, of San Antonio. Sessions could not be reached for comment.

"The clients are relatively unsophisticated consumers of legal services," this lawyer observed. "And lawyers are shameless flacks with respect to their own self-imagined ability. That combination always leads to excess . . . in law as it does in life."

Rostenkowski legal fees pile up

Lawmaker spends $358,000 in campaign funds so far

Rep. Dan Rostenkowski has spent at least $358,000 in campaign funds to pay the legal bills for himself, his political committees and aides in the ongoing federal probe of the congressman, according to reports released Monday.

The legal fees for the powerful Ways and Means Committee chairman have mushroomed as the investigation, which began as an inquiry into the illegal conversion of stamps into cash, has broadened into a wide-ranging probe of Rostenkowski's dealings, the campaign finance reports show.

In the first six months of 1993, campaign committees controlled by the Chicago Democrat spent $205,172 on legal fees, not including legal bills from two criminal defense attorneys who have recently represented him. Rostenkowski's congressional campaign committee, which has $1.2 million in cash, had previously reported spending $153,000 for legal bills in 1992.

The reports released Monday show that Rostenkowski paid the legal expenses of 10 former staff members from his Chicago and Washington offices and continued to pay legal bills for two current aides.

Rostenkowski has denied any wrongdoing. A federal grand jury in Washington is investigating charges that he received as much as $100,000 from the House Post Office and is also examining his leasing of cars and office space in Chicago.

A spokesman for the Federal Election Commission, which enforces federal campaign laws, said political candidates can use their campaign funds to pay legal bills, even in a criminal investigation. The issue has arisen in the past and the commission has issued legal opinions approving of such payments, said spokesman Fred Eiland.

A spokesman for Rostenkowski noted that "numerous times in the past" other members of Congress had also used their campaign funds to pay legal bills.

The legal fees were paid out of two political committees. Most came from the Rostenkowski for Congress Committee. His political action committee, America's Leader Fund, paid about $12,000 of the fees.

Some $158,000 of the campaign funds went to pay Stanley Brand, the Washington attorney who represented Rostenkowski earlier this year. Rostenkowski is now being represented by high-powered Washington lawyer Robert Bennett.

Chicago criminal defense lawyers said Rostenkowski's bills aren't excessive and are likely to increase as Bennett's team reviews the work of previous attorneys.

"The amount of the fees suggest to me that they [Rostenkowski's attorneys] have probably been out interviewing witnesses, reviewing documents subpoenaed by the grand jury, and basically tracking the government investigation," said one Chicago lawyer.

Rostenkowski has also been paying the legal bills of some of his most trusted aides.

Virginia Fletcher, who receives more than $90,000 as the congressman's top aide, had nearly $62,000 in legal fees paid for her. Nancy Panzke, his Chicago office manager, has had some $28,000 in legal bills paid on her behalf.

The Chicago law firm of Katten Muchin & Zavis represented Panzke as well as both political committees, said a lawyer for the firm. She declined to elaborate on the legal services the firm was providing.

Rostenkowski's congressional campaign committee paid about $28,000 in legal fees for the 10 former aides.

One of those aides is Thomas Sneeringer, Rostenkowski's former legislative director who is now a Washington lobbyist.

Sneeringer said he needed the lawyer for his grand jury appeareance and follow-up inquiries. He declined to discuss his testimony. He said he asked Rostenkowski to pay the $4,800 in legal fees that he incurred because "I can't afford it."

Many of the former aides whose legal fees were paid with the campaign funds worked for Rostenkowski between 1986 and 1992, the period for which prosecutors have subpoenaed numerous records.

Joan Ferrans, a former senior citizen coordinator in Rostenkowski's Chicago office whose $1,329 legal tab was paid, said she had not been subpoenaed to testify before the grand jury. She declined comment when asked if she had been questioned by federal agents.

Legal Bills Mount in Rosty Probe

More Than $355,000 Paid From Campaign Funds

U.S. Rep. Dan Rostenkowski has now spent more than $355,000 in campaign funds to pay lawyers representing him and his associates in the federal grand jury investigation of his finances, records show.

Two Rostenkowski political committees spent $201,333 on lawyers in the first six months of this year as the investigation grew more intense. Prosecutors are attempting to finish their probe of improprieties at the House post office while also investigating other aspects of Rostenkowski's finances.

Last year, the Chicago Democratic congressman used $153,930 in campaign funds for legal expenses.

House rules allow Rostenkowski to avoid using his personal funds for lawyers by legally tapping into his $1 million-plus campaign fund—the same $1 million fund his friends point out he could have cashed in by retiring last year if he were greedy.

Rostenkowski is not the first congressman to tap his campaign fund for six-figure legal bills. Rep. Newt Gingrich (R-Ga.) spent $147,900 on lawyers and accountants to successfully battle an ethics complaint, according to news accounts.

Other politicians facing huge legal bills have opted not to use campaign funds. Former House Speaker Jim Wright (D-Texas) raised more than $400,000 for a legal defense fund to fight ethics charges.

Records made public Monday also showed Rostenkowski continued to dip into his campaign fund to pay $1,250 a month rent to himself and his sister for a little-used campaign office in buildings where they live. Federal prosecutors began looking at the transaction earlier this year after the Chicago Sun-Times questioned the propriety of the arrangement.

The Rostenkowski investigation began last year with allegations of stamps being converted illegally to cash at the House post office.

Last month, prosecutors charged an unnamed Congressman A, whom sources identified as Rostenkowski, had illegally received $21,300 from former House Postmaster Robert V. Rota. Rota is cooperating in the investigation.

Investigators also are looking at Rostenkowski's use of government funds to obtain personal ownership of three vehicles. Rostenkowski has denied any wrongdoing.

In the first six months of 1993, Rostenkowski's political funds paid $82,715 to 12 of his associates for their legal bills along with $86,707 to Rostenkowski's attorneys. His main political committees—Rostenkowski for Congress and America's Leaders Fund—paid $31,911 to a Washington law firm for legal advice.

While House rules allow congressmen to use campaign funds to pay the legal bills for themselves and their staffs, federal prosecutors have questioned whether Rostenkowski was attempting to influence his aides' testimony by reimbursing them for their legal bills.

Aides called before the grand jury have been asked who is paying their legal bills. Rostenkowski maintains he pays the bills because he regrets they have been dragged into the probe. The grand jury has subpoenaed more than 20 current or former staffers.

The largest reimbursements so far this year went to Virginia Fletcher and Nancy Panzke, the two $90,000-a-year aides who run Rostenkowski's Capitol Hill and Chicago congressional offices, respectively. They oversee Rostenkowski's congressional expenses as well as his schedules.

Fletcher received $26,413 in the latest report and $35,505 in 1992. Panzke received $27,738 this year. Both have been given immunity in the probe and have testified before the grand jury.

Other reimbursements ranged from $1,369 to $5,150 for 10 other individuals, including eight former congressional staffers and two members of the executive board of his 32nd Ward political organization.

Using campaign funds to pay legal bills in criminal cases drew criticism from Public Citizen, a public interest group in Washington, D.C.

"I do think campaign expenses should be spent on legal expenses related to the campaign [but] not on criminal investigations pertaining to official duties once they're elected," said Public Citizen's Donna Edwards.

House postal probe detours to the bedroom

By Paul M. Rodriguez
THE WASHINGTON TIMES

It might be called "Sex, Lies and Audio Tape" were it not already copyrighted as "The House Post Office Scandal."

The unfolding story has all the elements for a good movie about the inside deals among the elite and powerful of Congress and the wanna-bes who help run the Hill's political machine.

The latest chapter finds federal prosecutors looking for information on who's been sleeping with whom, according to current and former congressional and federal law enforcement officials and lobbyists.

"They wanted to know things that had nothing to do with what they're supposed to be looking into," said one source. "The prosecutors are looking for dirt on people," said another source close to the probe. "You know, like mistresses, lovers, drinking problems, any drug habits, things like that."

"They want to know everything on the members, on all of them [involved] with the post office," said a third.

"I told them [the prosecutors] what I've heard about some of the people," the third source said. But "I'm not going to tell those snoopy [prosecutors] some things because I just don't think it's any of their business."

"I'll tell you what," said one source, "they sure do know a lot. They had some of the answers already and I guess they were just asking me to see if I had heard or knew the same thing."

Earlier, prosecutors and a federal grand jury looked into allegations of cocaine sales, embezzlement and illegal cashing of checks under the guise of stamp purchases.

Secret audio tapes — wiretapping of private conversations authorized by federal law enforcement officials — and new testimony from some of the players, such as Robert V. Rota, the former House postmaster who pleaded guilty last month to embezzlement, are expected to help confirm reports that several people on and off Capitol Hill conspired to hide the truth about illegal activities at the post office going back to at least 1980.

Individuals still working in the House may have perjured themselves and encouraged others to lie in testimony before a House task force and before the grand jury, according to the sources.

Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, Illinois Democrat and chairman of the tax-writing Ways and Means Committee, and Rep. Austin Murphy, Pennsylvania Democrat, have been implicated in a money-laundering scam, as has former Rep. Joe Kolter, Pennsylvania Democrat.

All three have denied wrongdoing and invoked their Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination when called to testify before the grand jury.

According to the sources, the grand jury has been hearing "some pretty incredible" testimony about a number of current and former lawmakers, as well as current and former senior staffers and high-powered lobbyists who allegedly used the post office for illegal purposes.

Some of the allegations that have gotten little attention from the media involve illegal campaign contributions funneled through the post office and the now-closed House bank.

"They [the prosecutors] have all they ever needed to know to hang all of them," said one source: "Rota has been spilling his guts for weeks now" since prosecutors agreed to allow him to plead guilty to three misdemeanors in return for his cooperation.

Helping prosecutors search for information is a federal task force of FBI agents, Internal Revenue Service agents, U.S. Capitol Police and U.S. Postal Inspection Service officers, along with local police and crime commission officials in several states.

While Mr. Rostenkowski has attracted most of the attention, witnesses who testified before the grand jury have implicated other congressmen, former members and staffers. Investigators have requested massive amounts of records in pursuing those leads.

"It has put a tremendous pressure on us," said one congressional source familiar with the requests. "It causes confusion and worry" when investigators show up, another agreed.

"They're moving up the food chain," said one source familiar with the grand jury's deliberations. "It's just a matter of time as they go from the little fish to the medium fish and then the bigger fish."

"All I know is that this thing's not going away and it's not stopping at Rostenkowski," said another source close to the probe.

As one former federal source asked, "Can the videotape be far behind?"

COMMENTARY

DAN THOMASSON

Seeking validation of victimization

Rep. Dan Rostenkowski may be a lot of things but one of them is not a sympathetic figure, despite the efforts of liberal pundits and frightened, fawning congressional colleagues to convince us otherwise.

The chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee is an up-from-the-wards machine politician who wields power deftly and often arrogantly in a classic big-city style. Cross him and you pay.

This, of course, does not make him guilty of a growing number of allegations, including embezzlement from the coffers of the House Post Office. But it does make charges that he is being victimized by former Republican U.S. Attorney Jay Stephens and others not only hollow but downright silly.

The victimization charges are even more cynical when one realizes that Mr. Rostenkowski last year chose to thumb his nose at a grand jury subpoena, sending word that he didn't consider it valid and that under the circumstances he would claim his Fifth Amendment rights.

There seems to be little question that Mr. Stephens, who apparently is running for political office in Virginia, badly overstepped his bounds by appearing on television to predict that Mr. Rostenkowski would be indicted and by charging that the Chicago lawmaker actually had taken more than $100,000 in Post Office cash.

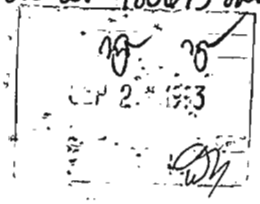
A number of former U.S. attorneys, many of whom are no friends of Mr. Rostenkowski, have chastized Mr. Stephens for spouting off about an investigation he initiated even if he is no longer in charge of it.

"It was terrible form," said another former federal prosecutor. "Even if he believes he was removed by the Clinton White House under pressure from Rosty, he should have kept his mouth shut."

The Clinton Justice Department this spring asked for the resignation of most of the U.S. attorneys nationwide despite a lack of nominees to fill the vacancies. Mr. Stephens and others charged it was a ploy to hamstring the Rostenkowski inquiry. Mr. Stephens claimed recently that the move delayed the possible indictment of Mr. Rostenkowski — a key player in the president's budget battle — by at least 90 days.

The real mystery is why this investigation has dragged on as long as it has without Mr. Rostenkowski being either indicted or cleared. Two former Post Office employees have fingered him in the embezzlement investigation.

Some of the delay obviously has been political. The White House has needed his influence and skill to keep the budget bill from foundering. It would be unlikely the Justice Department would sign off on an indictment until that process is completed.



A major test for the new president and his party will be if they can be objective about one of their own. It always is much easier for Democrats to indict Republicans and visa versa. Thirty years ago, the Democrats failed, white washing the sensational Bobby Baker case. Mr. Baker was the fall guy in a scandal that clearly could have touched a number of prominent Democrats, including Lyndon Johnson.

Mr. Rostenkowski, meanwhile, obviously isn't taking any chances. He has hired the most prominent criminal lawyer in Washington, Bob Bennett.

Those who defend him say the $21,000 he is alleged to have stolen is small potatoes. Why would he risk his career, they ask. Who knows. Men have wrecked their lives for much less. Dick Nixon didn't steal anything.

GOP tries to force ethics probe of post office

By Paul M. Rodriguez
THE WASHINGTON TIMES

A group of House Republicans, with the blessing of the GOP leadership, introduced a resolution yesterday to force the ethics committee to investigate embezzlement and other improprieties at the House post office.

The resolution, drafted by Rep. Ernest J. Istook of Oklahoma, immediately caused a rift among Republicans, some of whom said it was premature because the case is under federal investigation.

"How far does this corruption spread?" Mr. Istook asked. "We must find out" and not wait until a separate criminal probe by the Justice Department is completed.

Rep. Fred Grandy, Iowa Republican and the ranking member on the ethics committee, said Mr. Istook had a point but cautioned that "it's too early to get into [it] now."

The ethics panel, formally called the Committee on Standards of Official Conduct, was instructed last year to look into the post office scandal after a bipartisan task force found gross mismanagement at the facility.

Mr. Grandy, who has said he favors an ethics probe of the post office, said yesterday such an investigation should come after the U.S. Attorney's Office in Washington completes the criminal inquiry.

"I'll have to oppose" the resolution when it comes to the House floor for a vote sometime after Labor Day when Congress returns from its August recess, he said.

So far, eight former post office employees and the former postmaster, Robert V. Rota, have pleaded guilty to a variety of charges, including embezzlement through a stamps-for-cash and illegal check-cashing scheme.

Mr. Rota, 58, also pleaded guilty to helping several members of Congress, including two identified in court papers as "Congressman A" and "Congressman B", embezzle at least $30,000.

Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, Illinois Democrat and chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, and former Rep. Joe Kolter, Pennsyvlania Democrat, have been identified as Congressmen A and B, respectively, based on office voucher numbers in the Rota court papers.

Mr. Istook said he hoped to build public support during the August recess to pressure members into supporting his resolution.

The House last month defeated an attempt by Republicans to release thousands of documents and transcripts of at least 64 depositions collected by the bipartisan task force that probed the post office in 1992.

A letter from U.S. Attorney J. Ramsey Johnson warned House members that premature release of the task force's records could impede his investigation.

Democrats used that letter to keep the records sealed and to help shield colleagues from charges of trying to cover up embarrassing materials contained in the files.

Mr. Istook, joined by Texas Rep. Tom DeLay, secretary of the Republican Conference, said forcing the ethics committee to probe the post office now would not hamper the criminal probe.

His resolution, initially opposed by GOP leaders, would require the ethics committee to "determine which members are alleged by the former postmaster to have engaged in improper conduct in connection with the House post office, and whether these members are the subjects of any current investigation by the Department of Justice."

The resolution also said the panel may defer its inquiry on any member, if the Justice Department confirms in writing that the lawmaker is a subject of the criminal probe.

By putting that language into the resolution, Mr. Istook said the Justice Department could continue to protect its probe of lawmakers but still allow the ethics committee to investigate others who may not have violated criminal laws but may have broken House rules.

Rostenkowski Spends $355,000 on Lawyers' Fees

By TIM WEINER
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Aug. 4 — Representative Dan Rostenkowski, fighting a Federal investigation of his finances, has spent more than $355,000 in campaign funds on lawyers' fees for himself and his aides in the last 18 months, Federal records show.

Such use of campaign money is entirely lawful. But the amount of the lawyers' bills, while not unprecedented for a member of Congress under criminal inquiry, is a reflection of the depth of the legal trouble that Mr. Rostenkowski, the Illinois Democrat who heads the House Ways and Means Committee, may be facing.

Robert V. Rota, former postmaster of the House post office, has told Federal investigators that Mr. Rostenkowski embezzled tens of thousands of dollars from the post office by exchanging stamp vouchers drawn on his office account for cash, according to court records filed when Mr. Rota pleaded guilty to misdemeanor charges in Federal court here last month.

The records listing Mr. Rostenkowski's payment of lawyers' fees are in a campaign finance report that was filed with the Government, as is required periodically. The reports by his campaign committee, Rostenkowski for Congress, reflect the committee's transactions through this June 30.

The records, publicly released on Tuesday, confirm reports that the investigation, being conducted by the office of the United States Attorney in Washington, has reached into Mr. Rostenkowski's Chicago office.

Cars and His Sister

The investigation expanded earlier this year after The Chicago Sun-Times reported that Mr. Rostenkowski had taken ownership of three cars for which taxpayers had been charged more than $71,000 in lease payments and that he had used campaign funds to pay more than $73,000 to himself and his sister in rent for a campaign office.

Mr. Rostenkowski has strongly denied any wrongdoing.

The records show that two of Mr. Rostenkowski's top aides and at least five former members of his staff have had to hire lawyers to represent them while being interviewed by Federal agents or when called to testify before a Federal grand jury. In all, $205,000 of Mr. Rostenkowski's campaign money was spent in the first six months of this year on legal fees for himself and his aides, both here and in Chicago, and more than $150,000 was so spent in 1992, according to the records.

The committee's report showed assets of $1,271,852 as of June 30, the end of the reporting period.

Among the committee's payments in the first six months of 1993 was $86,707 to Brand & Lowell, a Washington law firm that specializes in representing politicians facing legal troubles. All of that payment was for representing Mr. Rostenkowski himself, who switched defense teams last month and is now being represented by two other prominent Washington lawyers, Robert Bennett and Carl Rauh.

Among the other payments for legal expenses in the first half of this year was $27,738 for Nancy Panzke, Mr. Rostenkowski's executive assistant in Chicago, and $26,413 for Virginia C. Fletcher, his administrative assistant in Washington, who has been a member of his staff since 1963.

Mrs. Fletcher has been offered immunity by Federal prosecutors in exchange for her testimony in the case, according to people familiar with the investigation.

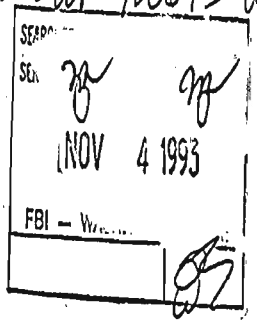
Rostenkowski paying legal bills of staffers

Rep. Dan Rostenkowski's campaign committee is paying the bills of current and former staff members who incurred legal expenses in the House post office investigation. His own legal bills also are covered.



The Illinois Democrat's administrative assistant in Washington, Virginia Fletcher, and the office manager in one of his Chicago offices, Nancy Panzke, received the financial help. So did at least six former staff members, according to public campaign records.

The chairman of the Ways and Means Committee has acknowledged he's under investigation in the post office case but has denied committing any crime.

Car, Van Titles Tied to Rosty

Grand Jury Told Vehicles Owned and Not Leased

A grand jury witness in the investigation of U.S. Rep. Dan Rostenkowski says subpoenaed documents show a Wilmette auto dealer handled the lawmaker's acquisition of three vehicles as purchases and not as government leases, as Rostenkowski maintains.

The federal government is trying to determine if Rostenkowski illegally used $73,000 in taxpayer funds to buy the vehicles and then disguised the payments as government leases for mobile offices.

The witness was Kevin Stiritz, a former employee of Wil-Shore Motor Sales Inc., who said the company's subpoenaed files, which he examined for prosecutors, contained purchase documents and not lease contracts and worksheets.

He said the dealership's files looked to him like the transactions were "100 percent retail purchases." Stiritz was the finance manager for the dealership from October, 1992, until February, 1993.

Stiritz had no direct involvement or knowledge of the Rostenkowski transactions. Prosecutors asked him to examine the documents and explain the normal way business was done at the dealership. He is one of several former and current Wil-Shore employees to be subpoenaed.

The files did not contain such basic lease information as instructions for returning the car or purchasing it when the lease expired, he said. The only lease document he was shown was the one Rostenkowski filed with the House so that Wil-Shore would get paid.

Stiritz said he spent Monday and Tuesday in Washington, D.C., with prosecutors and grand jurors investigating how the vehicles became Rostenkowski's personal property.

The federal investigation of the vehicles began after a Jan. 24 report in the Chicago Sun-Times questioned whether Rostenkowski had improperly used his congressional expense allowance to acquire the two vans and a station wagon.

Rostenkowski has denied any wrongdoing involving the vehicles and his aides insist the vehicles were leased. He's also denied allegations in the House post office scandal that he embezzled cash through transactions disguised as stamp purchases.

Robert S. Bennett, his Washington attorney, warned Friday night that "people should withhold judgment until all the evidence is in. ... The congressman is entitled to due process, and trial in the press and by the press violates that.

"You should question the motives of someone who goes into the grand jury and testifies in what is essentially a secret proceeding and then calls the newspapers to report on his testimony."

Witnesses before a federal grand jury are free to discuss their testimony, according to federal rules.

Beginning in February, 1987, records show Rostenkowski billed taxpayers $1,050 a month for "mobile offices" he told Congress he was leasing for two years each. They were a customized 1987 Ford Econoline van, a 1989 Ford Aerostar minivan and a 1991 Ford Taurus wagon.

The Sun-Times revealed that the $1,050 monthly payments made directly to the dealership exceeded the customary leasing cost for such vehicles. And unlike a standard lease, the cars were titled in Rostenkowski's name as soon as the payments started.

Stiritz was asked by prosecutors whether lease cars ever were put in the name of the person leasing the vehicle and he said he responded: "It is never done." He said the title is always kept in the name of the owner; in a standard lease, that would be the leasing company.

He said putting the car titles immediately in Rostenkowski's name was one of the signs the congressman was being treated as the owner and not the lessor. Rostenkowski also did not list the vehicles as leased on the title applications.

He said he was asked about one document that could indicate a lease: an insurance policy on one of the vehicles which listed Wil-Shore as a "lessee payee." Stiritz said this meant Wil-Shore would get the insurance proceeds if anything happened to the car.

Stiritz said the files showed the purchase prices of three vehicles were $25,000 for the Econoline, $21,000 for the Aerostar and $25,000 for the Taurus—close to the $25,000 taxpayers paid during each two-year lease periods.

After the lease periods ended, Rostenkowski retained ownership of the Econoline van and the Aerostar minivan. He has maintained he purchased the vehicles at the end of the leases, using $9,715 in campaign funds for the van and an undisclosed amount of personal funds to purchase the minivan.

Stiritz said he did not see any record of such payments in the files he examined.

Donald Roberts, the owner of Wil-Shore, could not be reached for comment Friday. He told the Sun-Times in the past that Rostenkowski "bought his cars from me in a normal fashion. I don't know what arrangement he has made with the government to pay for the cars."

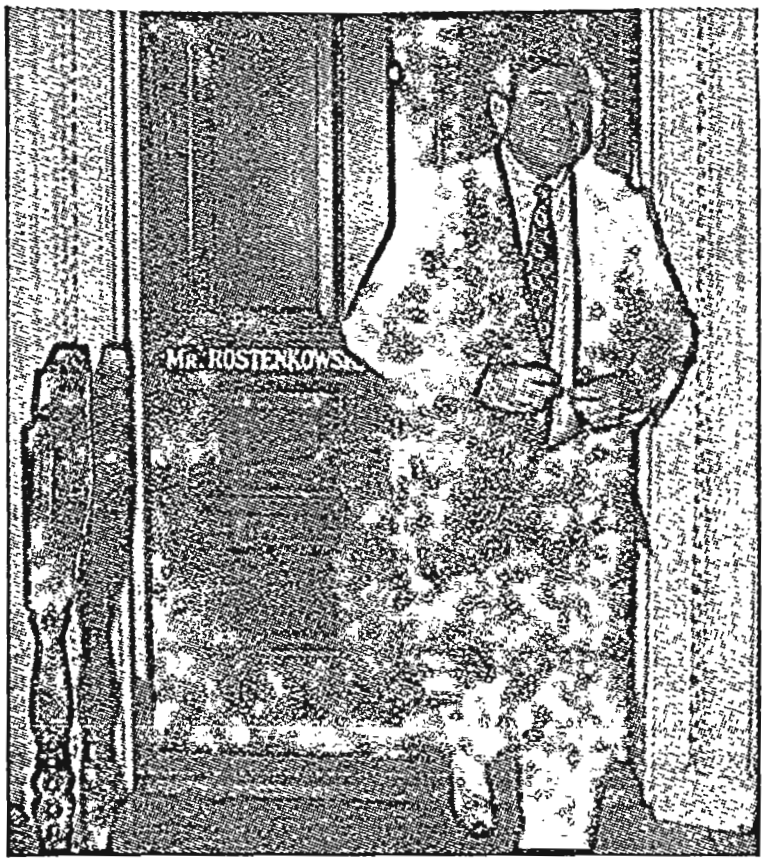
Federal prosecutors also questioned Stiritz about when the Taurus wagon was returned to Wil-Shore.

Rostenkowski has said he returned the wagon in November, 1992, before the lease was up and before the Sun-Times began asking questions about the vehicles in December.

Prosecutors showed Stiritz a copy of the Taurus' title that Rostenkowski had signed and given to Wil-Shore. His signature was dated Nov. 13 or 16, 1992, Stiritz said.

He told prosecutors the car was returned in late December or early January after Sun-Times inquiries.

He said the day the car was returned, he saw a man who could have been Rostenkowski leaving the dealership. He said he was told later by other employees that Rostenkowski had returned the car himself that day.



All three vehicles still are in Rostenkowski's name, according to the Illinois secretary of state's office.

All three vehicles were ordered with trailer hitches and heavy-duty suspensions, Stiritz said. The Taurus had a radio installed, a remote starter and an $800 alarm system, he said.

Stiritz said he also was asked what he knew about Rostenkowski's use of campaign funds at Wil-Shore. He said he had no knowledge of those transactions.

The grand jury also appears to be trying to determine if Rostenkowski used campaign funds to acquire personal vehicles at Wil-Shore, other sources have said.

The Rostenkowski for Congress Committee paid $68,440 to Wil-Shore between 1975 and 1988. He, and his family took title to many automobiles from Wil-Shore during that period.

WHO USES MOBILE OFFICES

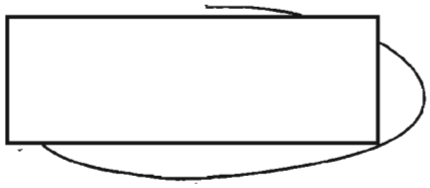
Dan Rostenkowski had one of the smallest districts in Congress in the last session: some 33 square miles. Yet for six years he charged taxpayers a hefty $1,050 a month to lease a mobile office.

Of the 23 representatives who leased a mobile office in 1991, Rostenkowski's district was the smallest, according to a USA Today and Gannett News Service study.

Other representatives lease mobile offices, like converted Winnebago mobile homes, to service constituents who live hundreds of miles from their official district offices. Rostenkowski's congressional office at the time, at 2148 N. Damen, was within 10 miles of any point in his district.

Rostenkowski has declined to discuss how he used his mobile offices—two vans and a station wagon.



In addition to his mobile offices, Rostenkowski also charges taxpayers to lease a 1988 Lincoln Continental for driving around the district.

More House Records Sought in Postal Probe

By Michael Briggs
Sun-Times Washington Bureau

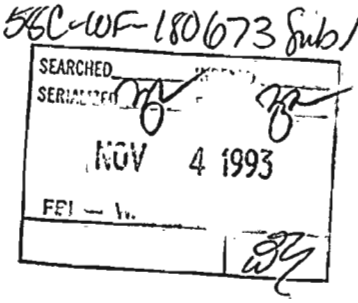
WASHINGTON—Federal prosecutors have sought more congressional records in a long-running investigation of embezzlement from the House post office and of Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.).

U.S. Attorney J. Ramsey Johnson asked the House Administration Committee chairman for a list of everyone interviewed last year in a preliminary investigation of the post office by the committee.

The top federal prosecutor for the District of Columbia also asked Rep. Charlie Rose (D-N.C.), the committee chairman, for notes and summaries of interviews of one present and four former post office employees who were questioned as part of the committee's preliminary investigation and a subsequent one by a special task force.

The Aug. 6 letter from Johnson had a conciliatory tone that was decidedly different than a July 20 letter to Rose, when Johnson raised concerns about apparently "missing" documents and indicated prosecutors were frustrated that their "repeated requests" for records may not have been fully satisfied.

Among what Johnson had called "unaccounted for" records were correspondence files of former House Postmaster Robert V. Rota for recent years.



Rota has pleaded guilty to conspiracy and embezzlement from the post office on behalf of congressmen who were not named in the court papers but are believed to include Rostenkowski and former Pennsylvania congressman Joe P. Kolter. They have not been charged with any crime.

In the most recent letter, the prosecutor did not specifically mention the Rota files, but Johnson generally described as "very helpful" a meeting on Aug. 2 between prosecutors and House lawyers to discuss the prosecutors' earlier concerns.

The latest letter also asked for additional information, including the witness list from the committee's preliminary inquiry into the matter and the notes and summaries of interviews with the five former or present post office workers.

The five are Rota, the former postmaster; Joanna G. O'Rourke, the former post office chief of staff who earlier this year pleaded guilty to embezzlement; Nancy Auerbach Collins, who still works at the post office; James C. Smith, a retired post office manager who has cooperated with prosecutors; and Dorothea Niki Risenhoover, a former post office clerk who pleaded guilty last year to cocaine possession and conspiracy in a plea bargain that required her to help prosecutors.

According to a trustee of the now-bankrupt carpet store, the grand jury subpoenaed the records of the 1990 carpet purchase several months ago.

The jury is conducting a wide-ranging inquiry into Rostenkowski's use of federal and campaign money. The panel also is examining Rostenkowski's unusual car-leasing arrangement and payments to family members for office rent in Chicago. And it has subpoenaed numerous members of his family, friends and staff.

In addition to these Chicago-based matters, several witnesses have told prosecutors and the grand jury that Rostenkowski traded stamps, purchased with federal and campaign funds, for cash at the House post office.

Federal law prohibits using campaign or congressional funds for personal purposes. The powerful Chicago Democrat, chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, has denied any wrongdoing.

His campaign committee, the Rostenkowski for Congress Committee, listed payments of $3,300 for carpeting bought in November and December of 1990, campaign finance reports show.

"We got the subpoena and turned the documents over to the FBI," said William Grabscheid, a court-appointed trustee for the bankrupt firm, Carpet Wholesalers Inc. The subpoena requested copies of the invoice for the purchase, he said.

An attorney familiar with the records said the invoice indicates the carpeting was delivered to 1372 W. Evergreen Ave., where Rostenkowsi and his wife live.

It is unclear how much carpeting the committee purchased, because the amount is illegible on the invoice, the attorney said.

Rostenkowski's family owns three buildings at West Evergreen Avenue and North Noble Street. Besides the three-story home at 1372 W. Evergreen, he maintains a campaign office in an adjacent four-story complex at 1347-49 N. Noble St., where his sister lives.

Alvin Block, an attorney for the former owner of the carpet store, Allan Dolin, said Dolin was unaware that the purchase was being investigated.

Last week, a former employee of a Wilmette car dealer told federal prosecutors that subpoenaed records suggest Rostenkowski used taxpayer funds to purchase two vans over a four-year period.

The employee, Kevin Stiritz, who was a finance manager for Wil-Shore Motors, said he told the grand jury that he saw nothing in the subpoenaed records to support Rostenkowski's contention that the vehicles were leased and that he or his campaign purchased them at the end of the lease period. And he said Rostenkowski's arrangement with Wil-Shore was unlike that of any other customer.

For years, Rostenkowski has used congressional money to lease vehicles for use in his district, a permitted practice. But in the case of the two vans, after the lease period expired, Rostenkowski or his campaign took possession of the vehicles.

Over the years, the payments of $1,050 a month covered the purchase price of the vehicles, Stiritz said. Overall, Rostenkowski paid more than $50,400 from his congressional expense account from 1987 to 1990 for the two vans.

Prosecutors are examining whether taxpayers were essentially financing the two vans and a third vehicle, a station wagon, that was also titled in Rostenkowski's name.

Stiritz said he reviewed the subpoenaed documents with federal prosecutors and the grand jury.

"I was asked specifically about the documents," said Stiritz, who quit the dealership in February. "Is there any indication there is a lease? Was there a lease? I was asked very specific questions by the grand jurors about the method of payment."

Stiritz said he told prosecutors there was no indication that Rostenkowski had actually leased the vehicles from the dealership.

"There is no lease, period," Stiritz contended. "It was a 100 percent cash purchase. It never, ever was a lease. It was done for Dan's personal use. It is impossible for it to be a lease with the documents the way that they are."

Nevertheless, an employee of the dealership signed a sworn statement that was submitted to Congress saying the dealership was leasing the vehicles to Rostenkowski, Stiritz said.

Recalling his testimony, Stiritz said nothing in the subpoenaed files that he reviewed showed any payment for purchase of the vans other than the government funds. Stiritz said he told the grand jury he saw no record that Rostenkowski himself or his campaign committee had paid for them.

Rostenkowski has contended that, at the end of the lease period, his campaign committee paid more than $9,000 for one of the vans, a Ford Econoline, and that he or his campaign committee also paid for the other van, a Ford Aerostar. The Ford Taurus station wagon was turned in to the dealership last December.

House post office controversy: Bug grows into a monster

WASHINGTON—A few weeks after U.S. Capitol Police began investigating alleged embezzlement by House postal clerks in 1991, Police Chief Frank Kerrigan heard that aides to House Speaker Thomas Foley (D-Wash.) were upset that his detectives were pushing the case so hard.

So Kerrigan took a remarkable step for a longtime appointee on Capitol Hill: After the House's chief counsel, Steven Ross, asked for a meeting, Kerrigan and his deputies hid a tiny tape recorder in a television cabinet in the chief's office, turning it on just before Ross arrived.

As the tape whirled surreptitiously, Kerrigan later told House investigators, Ross accused the police of being out of control and chastised them for feeding evidence to prosecutors without seeking approval from House leaders.

But by Kerrigan's account, the most disturbing remark came a few minutes later, when Ross said the police "should cooperate" with House leaders "because we were looking for a pay raise and other benefits and that we needed Congress' help in obtaining these."

Kerrigan and at least one of his deputies said they viewed Ross' comments as a veiled threat that they should back away from the potentially explosive investigation. Ross adamantly denies he ever linked police pay to the postal inquiry or that he tried to impede it.

But over the last two years, this curious episode has come to crystallize serious questions about how Foley and his aides have handled the scandal at the House post office. And the concerns have escalated now that prosecutors are focusing intently on possible improprieties by a powerful House member, Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.).

No one has accused Foley and his staff of taking any actions to protect Rostenkowski, whose name did not surface in the investigation until nearly a year after the Ross-Kerrigan dispute.

Rostenkowski, chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, has denied allegations that he pocketed at least $20,000 by trading government stamp vouchers for cash.

But interviews and a close review of 500 pages of House reports show that, at several key moments, Foley's staff and other top Democrats appeared far more concerned about minimizing embarrassment to the House and its members than in quickly getting to the bottom of possible wrongdoing.

In that sense, the criticism mirrors complaints about Foley's performance during a scandal involving the House bank, which has eroded public confidence in Congress.

The harshest questions have been raised by federal prosecutors, who disclosed last year that they were examining whether any House officials had attempted to obstruct justice in the earliest stages of the postal inquiry.

Shortly after Kerrigan met with Ross, the police chief turned over the only copy of his tape recording to the prosecutors. Law-enforcement sources said a federal grand jury later called Ross and Heather Foley, the speaker's wife and chief of staff, to testify about any discussions they had with former House Postmaster Robert Rota on how to respond to the inquiry.

The criticism of Foley flared again last month when House Republicans accused him of trying to "cover up" information about the scandal.

The GOP's charges came during a rancorous floor debate over whether the House should release thousands of pages of files from its own examination of the patronage-ridden postal facility.

Foley, 64, who has been speaker since 1989, responded angrily that he and his staff have done nothing wrong. He first said he favored releasing the files. But he later led his party in voting to keep them sealed after prosecutors said release could jeopardize parts of their investigation.

The wild card in judging Foley's actions could be what Rota, who recently became the seventh postal employee to plead guilty to federal charges, reveals about what happened after the first clerk admitted in May 1991 that he had embezzled government money.

Several defense lawyers said they believe there is little chance prosecutors will seek obstruction charges against any Foley aides.

But they also said Rota's cooperation could open a new window on his discussions with Heather

Foley and Ross, and this is what GOP leaders were hoping to highlight in clamoring for release of the House files.

In a guarded interview with House investigators shortly after he was forced to resign last year, Rota said he had met Heather Foley and Ross on June 6, 1991, to seek advice on dealing with the Capitol Police, who work for Congress and are best known for providing security for the Capitol and prominent members.

At that point, the police already had conducted a surprise audit and were pressing to interview several postal tellers whose accounts were missing money.

According to House reports, Rota was upset that the detectives already had handed the audit to criminal prosecutors and would not give him a copy.

Rota said Ross told him at the June 6 meeting to make sure the workers knew that they had a right to decline to talk to police or to bring an attorney to an interview.

But, at Ross' direction, Rota said, he canceled all the interviews, setting off a flurry of negotiations that led to Kerrigan's taping of his meeting with Ross, which occurred June 19, 1991.

Ross, now in private practice, declined last week to discuss his actions. He told House investigators, however, that he did not recall talking to Rota before June 17.

Ross also said that, in his meeting with Kerrigan, he was concerned about whether the Capitol Police, as a legislative entity, should have been assisting prosecutors in the executive branch, even though the police had often done this in other types of cases. Ross said he sought only to replace the police with U.S. postal inspectors, better trained to root out fraud.

At Ross' suggestion, and with Foley's approval, the U.S. attorney here eventually agreed to give the inspectors the lead role.

Kerrigan, who is now retired, has complained that the changeover caused a one-month delay.

Then, in September 1991—just days after the first news stories appeared about overdrafts at the House bank—the postal inspectors reported to Rota that they had confirmed that tens of thousands of dollars were missing from postal coffers.

Rota immediately told Foley's staff. But Foley has acknowledged that his office did not pass on this information to House oversight committees until the Washington Times broke the story about the postal inquiry in January 1992.

And when a bipartisan House task force examined the postal operations as last year's elections approached, the Democrats proved skittish about disclosing much that might embarrass members. So the GOP wrote its own report, which was nearly four times the length of the Democrats' version.

Voice of the people

Partisanship is a poor way to govern

WASHINGTON—Congressional Democrats are justly proud of enacting Bill Clinton's budget all by themselves. But it would have been a better process that might have yielded a better policy had we been able to win bipartisan support for this important legislation.

Republicans made this point repeatedly during the floor debate and they were right. The bill probably would have contained more spending cuts, a result I would have supported. What we should do now is not endlessly rechew the question of why the Republicans weren't there. Instead, leaders of both parties should be thinking of ways to avoid a recurrence.

I believe such partisan votes exact a price from both parties. For the Democrats, the need to hold 85 percent of House members together requires a bit of pandering to those on the fringes. This diminishes the power of those of us at the center. It also forces loyal Democrats to blindly defend the product that results for fear that criticism of the warts will be used against them in partisan debate.

But the damage to Republicans is more serious. They become marginalized and virtually irrelevant to the process. While the deep thinkers of the GOP may think they can recapture the White House by following Nancy Reagan's advice and just saying no, the Republican members I know came to Washington because they want to solve problems faced by their constituents.

Even if the big-picture Republicans were correct, their strategy is corrupt. There's no possibility they'll be able to govern in the near future without Democratic congressional cooperation. And their chances of such future cooperation are steadily declining as they impose new rules on the game. Meanwhile individual Republican members—and their voters—pay a high price.

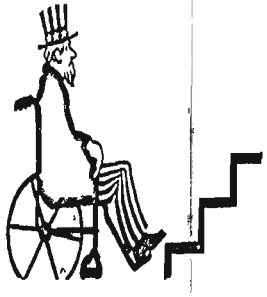
When they spurn the debate as a matter of party discipline, they deny themselves the opportunity to help their constituents. It is not an accident that none of the problems addressed were in districts represented by Republicans.

There is a growing number of Republicans in Congress who have never enjoyed the benefits of bipartisan cooperation. If we allow that number to grow, things will become worse. As one who wants to govern, I want to reverse this.

I write these words partly as an olive branch to them. Let us both learn from the bitter debate we have both participated in. Let us work together, despite our differences on issues, to avoid a recurrence.

As chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, I worked with Ronald Reagan and George Bush to enact positive legislation. The Democratic Party did not suffer because we tried to modify Republican proposals to a point where we could endorse them.

Now things have changed because the Democrats control the White House. But it would be a tragic mistake for my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to use this shift as an excuse not to cooperate.



The budget debate was an exhilarating victory for the Democrats. But it was not a pleasant experience. Now is the time for members of both parties to learn from experience so we are not doomed to repeat it.

Rosty Creates Defense Fund

Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) will soon begin soliciting donations for a legal defense fund to pay lawyers' bills that are mounting from the federal investigation into his financial affairs.

Chicago businessman James McDonough, a former chairman of the CTA, confirmed Tuesday that Rostenkowski has asked him to act as trustee for the recently created legal defense fund.

Rostenkowski has used $855,000 in campaign funds to pay his lawyers and those of associates called before a federal grand jury in Washington, D.C., which is looking into the House post office scandal and Rostenkowski's personal finances. His campaign fund has $1.2 million remaining that could be used for legal bills, which may be topping $400 an hour.

House rules allow lawmakers to avoid using their personal funds for lawyers by tapping their campaign funds or setting up legal defense funds.

The rules for donations to legal defense funds are much more liberal than for campaign funds.

By setting up a legal defense fund, Rostenkowski can solicit annual contributions of up to $5,000 each from individuals and groups such as unions and corporations.

In contrast, individuals cannot give more than $2,000 to a congressional campaign fund in a two-year period. Corporations and labor unions also are barred from making donations to congressional campaign funds.

Legal defense funds are nothing new on Capitol Hill. Several other high-profile congressmen and senators have established defense funds in the last decade when faced with criminal or congressional ethics charges.

The list includes Sen. Bob Packwood (R-Ore.), who faces sexual harassment charges; Sen. Alfonse M. D'Amato (R-N.Y.), who beat an ethics investigation into his fund-raising and relationships with lobbyists, and former House Speaker Jim Wright (D-Texas), who raised more than $400,000 to fight ethics charges.

"Not many Americans have recourse to wealthy individuals and corporations if they are accused of a crime whether they are guilty or not," said Josh Goldstein, a critic of legal defense funds and a project director at the Center for Responsive Politics, a nonpartisan group in Washington, D.C., that monitors campaign funds.

"Congressmen attract money from people who want to influence public policy," he said.

Rostenkowski's aides referred calls for comment to his new attorney, Robert Bennett, who was on vacation and did not return messages. Rostenkowski has denied any wrongdoing.

Goldstein says setting up a legal defense fund allows donors who have already given their legal limit to the campaign fund a chance to give more.

He said Rostenkowski should have little problem raising money for his defense fund with the debate on health care reform coming before the pivotal House Ways and Means Committee, which Rostenkowski chairs.

Rostenkowski has been able to amass one of the largest campaign funds in the House with donations from people outside his district who have an interest in tax legislation before his committee. Rostenkowski would have to give up the Ways and Means chairmanship if he is indicted.

Rostenkowski will not have to disclose the names of any defense fund donors until May 15, the deadline for filing his personal financial disclosure forms.

The House ethics committee approved the creation of Rostenkowski's legal defense fund earlier this month, according to McDonough, who was approved as the fund's trustee. Rostenkowski has not started soliciting money, McDonough said.

The ethics committee approved the use of the defense fund for the legal bills of Rostenkowski and his immediate family, said McDonough, who has known Rostenkowski for 30 years. McDonough said he had not discussed with Rostenkowski how much money will be raised or whether the fund would pay bills for the daughters of the lawmaker who have been called before the grand jury.

Defense fund money can only be used for legal expenses and cannot be converted to any other use. Any leftover funds must be returned to contributors or donated to charity, according to House rules.

McDonough said Rostenkowski approached him about setting up the fund after hiring the defense team of Robert Bennett and Carl Rauh, two high-powered Washington attorneys. Bennett, who has represented a number of government officials, reportedly charges $415 an hour.

"[Rostenkowski] indicated that a proper defense exceeded his ability to pay," said McDonough, who, as trustee, will accept the donations and pay the bills.

McDonough heads McDonough Associates Inc., a Chicago engineering firm with contracts from local governments. He headed the city Streets and Sanitation Department under the late Mayor Richard J. Daley.

Rostenkowski picks defense fund trustee

U.S. Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, who has spent $358,000 in campaign funds to pay legal bills stemming from a federal investigation into his finances, will soon seek donations to a new legal defense fund.

A Chicago businessman, James McDonough, said Wednesday he has been tapped by Rostenkowski to serve as a trustee of the fund. McDonough said the House Ethics Committee approved creation of the fund about 10 days ago.

House rules permit congressmen to use campaign funds and legal defense funds in cases where the representative is the subject of a criminal investigation.

The Ethics Committee contends that the "protection of a member's reputation and presumption of innocence to be a valid political purpose," according to a House ethics manual.

But watchdog groups have criticized the creation of such defense funds, contending that it permits special-interest groups to make donations to congressmen.

Federal prosecutors in Washington are investigating whether Rostenkowski, a Democrat from Chicago's Northwest Side, illegally converted stamps to cash and whether he has illegally used campaign and congressional funds for personal use.

A federal grand jury investigating Rostenkowski is examining documents that indicate that his congressional campaign fund paid for carpet delivered to his home.

The panel also is examining Rostenkowski's car-leasing arrangement and payments to family members for office rent in Chicago. Numerous members of his family, friends and staff have been subpoenaed. He has denied any wrongdoing.

Rostenkowski, who is chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, has changed lawyers three times during the investigation and also has paid attorneys who represent aides and his campaign committees, campaign records show.

Witnesses who have been subpoenaed have been told the investigation is likely to conclude in October.

McDonough said he is a longtime friend of the congressman, having met Rostenkowski 30 years ago when he played against a softball team sponsored by then-32nd Ward Democratic Committeeman Joseph Rostenkowski, the congressman's father.

McDonough is a former Streets and Sanitation commissioner under Mayor Richard J. Daley and an ex-chairman of the Chicago Transit Authority.

In his role as trustee, the House Ethics Committee requires that McDonough not have any family, business or employment relationship with Rostenkowski and that he serve as the chief fiduciary.

He said he won't be involved in soliciting funds and is still awaiting a meeting with attorneys to work out other details. "Hopefully, we are talking weeks, not months," he said.

Under House rules, Rostenkowski can receive donations of up to $5,000 from individuals, corporations, unions and other interests for the defense fund. He must report the donations on his annual ethics statement if the donations exceed $250.

Donors to his congressional committee can't exceed $2,000 per election, and corporations and unions are prohibited from making any donations.

Car, Van Titles Tied to Rosty

Grand Jury Told Vehicles Owned and Not Leased

A grand jury witness in the investigation of U.S. Rep. Dan Rostenkowski says subpoenaed documents show a Wilmette auto dealer handled the lawmaker's acquisition of three vehicles as purchases and not as government leases, as Rostenkowski maintains.

The federal government is trying to determine if Rostenkowski illegally used $73,000 in taxpayer funds to buy the vehicles and then disguised the payments as government leases for mobile offices.

The witness was Kevin Stritz, a former employee of Wil-Shore Motor Sales Inc., who said the company's subpoenaed files which he examined for prosecutors, contained purchase documents and not lease contracts and worksheets.

He said the dealership's files looked to him like the transactions were "100 percent retail purchases." Stiritz was the finance manager for the dealership from October, 1992, until February, 1993.

Stiritz had no direct involvement or knowledge of the Rostenkowski transactions. Prosecutors asked him to examine the documents and explain the normal way business was done at the dealership. He is one of several former and current Wil-Shore employees to be subpoenaed.

The files did not contain such basic lease information as instructions for returning the car or purchasing it when the lease expired, he said. The only lease document he was shown was the one Rostenkowski filed with the House so that Wil-Shore would get paid.

Stiritz said he spent Monday and Tuesday in Washington, D.C., with prosecutors and grand jurors investigating how the vehicles became Rostenkowski's personal property.

The federal investigation of the vehicles began after a Jan. 24 report in the Chicago Sun-Times questioned whether Rostenkowski had improperly used his congressional expense allowance to acquire the two vans and a station wagon.

Rostenkowski has denied any wrongdoing involving the vehicles and his aides insist the vehicles were leased. He's also denied allegations in the House post office scandal that he embezzled cash through transactions disguised as stamp purchases.

Robert S. Bennett, his Washington attorney, warned Friday night that "people should withhold judgment until all the evidence is in. ... The congressman is entitled to due process, and trial in the press and by the press violates that.

"You should question the motives of someone who goes into the grand jury and testifies in what is essentially a secret proceeding and then ... the newspapers to report ... testimony."

Witnesses before a federal grand jury are free to discuss their testimony, according to federal rules.

Beginning in February, 1987, records show Rostenkowski billed taxpayers $1,050 a month for "mobile offices" he told Congress he was leasing for two years each. They were a customized 1987 Ford Econoline van, a 1989 Ford Aerostar minivan and a 1991 Ford Taurus wagon.

The Sun-Times revealed that the $1,050 monthly payments made directly to the dealership exceeded the customary leasing cost for such vehicles. And unlike a standard lease, the cars were titled in Rostenkowski's name as soon as the payments started.

Stiritz was asked by prosec... whether lease cars ever were p... the name of the person leasing ... vehicle and he said he respon... "It is never done." He said the ... is always kept in the name of ... owner; in a standard lease, t... would be the leasing company.

He said putting the car titles immediately in Rostenkowski's name was one of the signs the congressman was being treated as the owner and not the lessor. Rostenkowski also did not list the vehicles as leased on the title applications.

He said he was asked about one document that could indicate a lease: an insurance policy on one of the vehicles which listed Wil-Shore as a "lessee payee." Stiritz said this meant Wil-Shore would get the insurance proceeds if anything happened to the car.

Stiritz said the files showed the purchase prices of three vehicles were $25,000 for the Econoline, $21,000 for the Aerostar and $25,000 for the Taurus—close to the $25,000 taxpayers paid during each two-year lease periods.

After the lease periods ended, Rostenkowski retained ownership of the Econoline van and the Aerostar minivan. He has maintained he purchased the vehicles at ... end of the leases, using $9,715 ... campaign funds for the van and ... undisclosed amount of pers... funds to purchase the minivan.

Donald Roberts, the owner of Wil-Shore, could not be reached for comment Friday. He told the Sun-Times in the past that Rostenkowski "bought his cars from me in a normal fashion. I don't know what arrangement he has made with the government to pay for the cars."

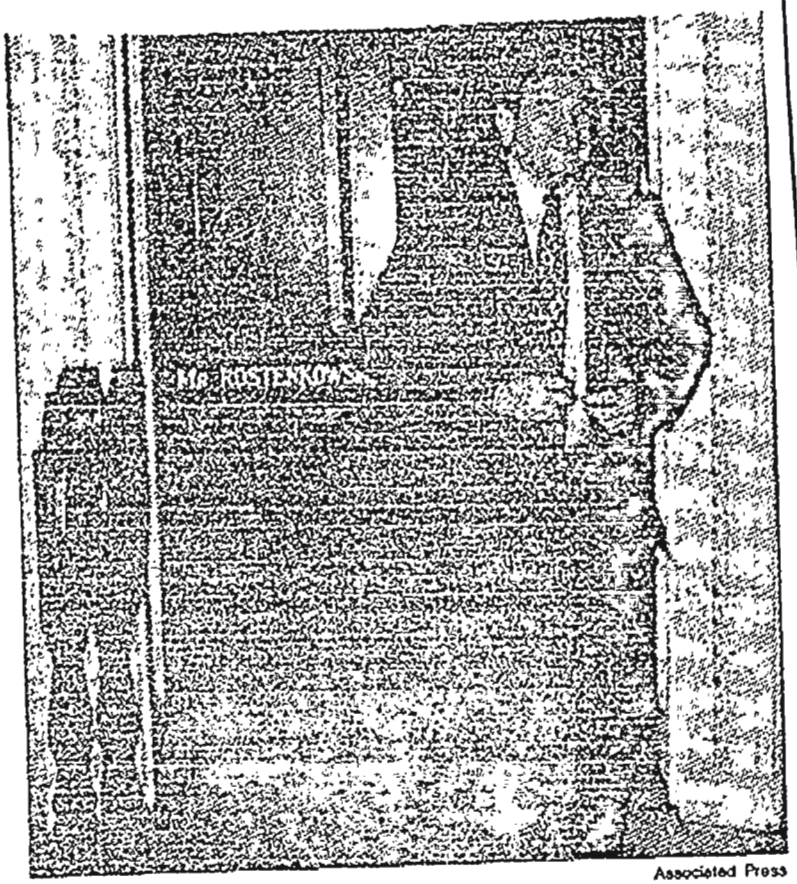
Federal prosecutors also questioned Stiritz about when the Taurus wagon was returned to Wil-Shore.

Rostenkowski has said he returned the wagon in November, 1992, before the lease was up and before the Sun-Times began asking questions about the vehicles in December.

Prosecutors showed Stiritz a copy of the Taurus' title that Rostenkowski had signed and given to Wil-Shore. His signature was dated Nov. 13 or 16, 1992, Stiritz said.

He told prosecutors the car was returned in late December or early January after Sun-Times inquiries.

He said the day the car was returned, he saw a man who could have been Rostenkowski leaving the dealership. He said he was told later by other employees that Rostenkowski had returned the car himself that day.



All three vehicles still are in Rostenkowski's name, according to the Illinois secretary of state's office.

All three vehicles were ordered with trailer hitches and heavy duty suspensions, Stiritz said. The Taurus had a radio installed, a remote starter and an $800 alarm system, he said.

Stiritz said he also was asked what he knew about Rostenkowski's use of campaign funds at Wil-Shore. He said he had no knowledge of those transactions.

The grand jury also appears to be trying to determine if Rostenkowski used campaign funds to acquire personal vehicles at Wil-Shore, other sources have said.

WHO USES MOBILE OFFICES?

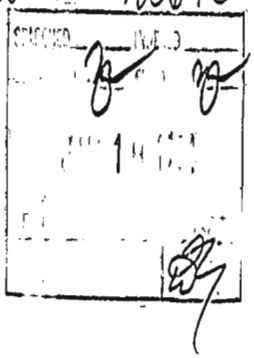
Dan Rostenkowski had one of the smallest districts in Congress in the last session, some 33 square miles. Yet for six years he charged taxpayers a hefty $1,050 a month to lease a mobile office.

Of the 23 representatives who leased a mobile office in 1991, Rostenkowski's district was the smallest, according to a USA Today and Gannett News Service study.

Other representatives use mobile offices, like converted Winnebago mobile homes, to service constituents who live hundreds of miles from their official district offices. Rostenkowski's congressional office at the time, at 2148 N. Damen, was within 10 miles of any point in his district.

Rostenkowski has declined to discuss how he used his mobile offices -two vans and a station wagon.



In addition to his mobile offices, Rostenkowski also charges taxpayers to lease a 1983 Lincoln Continental for driving around the district.

If Rostenkowski Falls

The man Tampa residents call "Silent Sam" may soon become a booming voice on Capitol Hill. For more than a quarter century, Rep. Sam Gibbons (D-Fla.) has worked in the shadows of other representatives on the House Ways and Means Committee. If Ways and Means Chairman Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) is the pit bull of the House, Sam Gibbons may be its poodle. Friends and foes alike describe him as Capitol Hill's nice guy. Even his campaigns are free from mudslinging and marked by civility.

If Rostenkowski, who is under federal investigation, is indicted and forced to relinquish the chairmanship, Gibbons would become interim chairman of the tax-writing committee. Rostenkowski has been under investigation for allegedly scheming to exchange postage stamps and vouchers for $20,000 cash at the House Post Office.

The White House had counted on Rostenkowski to be its field general for some major domestic priorities in the coming months, notably health care reform and the North American Free Trade Agreement.

On health care, Gibbons's ideas clash with the administration's. Even on free trade, which Gibbons has supported for decades, he was passed over in favor of fellow committee member Robert T. Matsui (D-Calif.) as the committee's chief vote-getter on NAFTA.

Speculation in the House has centered on the possibility of a more collective leadership at Ways and Means if Gibbons becomes chairman. Nagging doubts about Gibbons's leadership have led some to speculate that longtime committee member Charles B. Rangel (D-N.Y.) would be picking up some of the slack on major issues.

"[Gibbons] is part of a smallish, somewhat diminishing clique of southern and South-central Democrats on Ways and Means who are for things like capital gains [tax cuts]," one senior congressional staff member said. "They do not represent the mainstream of the committee, and Gibbons is very much their leader. He doesn't have a major voice in Congress and is rarely heard from except when his vote is vital."

Gibbons will not speculate on Rostenkowski's future—the chairman has said he is innocent—but the prospect of taking over Ways and Means has been a goal since he joined the panel 25 years ago.

"I've wanted to be chairman ever since I've been here," Gibbons told our associate Jan Moller.

On the possibilities open to him should a leadership change occur, Gibbons will say only that "the longer one stays here, the more one learns not to take anything for granted."

With speculation running high about Rostenkowski's future, Gibbons's campaign coffers have been overflowing. Campaign contributions are the lifeblood of incumbency in Congress, and Gibbons appears to be taking full advantage of his peculiar position.

The first six months of a congressional term tend to be downtime for contributors, yet Gibbons's campaign machinery has been in full swing for several months. In the first six months of 1993, Gibbons raised more than $209,000 for his 1994 reelection campaign. By comparison, Gibbons's contributions totaled a mere $16,531 for the first six months of 1991, during the last election cycle.

Gibbons told us he had to begin raising money earlier this time around because his campaign funds were largely depleted after the 1992 campaign, which he won with 57 percent of the vote. Thus, he began holding fund-raisers last spring rather than waiting until later in the year, as he has in the past. He told us the current election cycle is no different from anything he has done in the past. "I haven't found them [lobbyists] beating down my door," Gibbons says.

But to others, Gibbons's popularity on the money circuit is merely a sign of the lobbying community's desire to hedge its bets on Rostenkowski's future. "It's like a stock market," one longtime House staff worker said. "His [Gibbons's] stock is high right now. He's a much more important figure now than he was six months ago."

Gibbons's stock may be higher, and it may be reflected in his campaign coffers, but at least one prominent contributor who lobbies on trade matters believes there is nothing different about this election cycle. "I don't think it has anything to do with people trying to anticipate whether or not [Rostenkowski] gets indicted. He [Gibbons] will attract a certain amount of attention and support" no matter what happens, the lobbyist said.

Who Will Fill Colin Powell's Shoes?

WASHINGTON—President Clinton hasn't made a final decision about who will replace GENERAL COLIN POWELL as Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, but a source close to the selection process has told TIME that two candidates have emerged as front runners. Leading the pack is Air Force General George ("Lee") Butler, and for now Marine General Joseph Hoar is holding on to second place. Since Powell and his immediate predecessor have come from the Army and Navy respectively, the normal rotation would suggest that the next Joint Chiefs Chairman be a general, such as Butler, from the Air Force. Nonetheless, Hoar is considered a strong contender because of what some see as his first-rate job as head of America's forces in the Middle East.

The Navy Prevails over Clinton Pledge

WASHINGTON—Having beaten the President on the gays-in-uniform issue, the military has challenged Clinton's resolve on other campaign promises. In one instance, the Navy appears to have done so successfully: it has persuaded Clinton to drop his pledge to reduce the number of carrier task forces from 13 to 10. A forthcoming Pentagon planning document states that the Navy will retain 12 of its carrier battle groups. Depending on how many vessels each one includes, a carrier battle group costs upwards of $20 billion.

The Traditional Sending of the Résumés

CHICAGO—If the loyalty of staff in times of trouble is any indication of a politician's fate, then DAN ROSTENKOWSKI's future may not be bright. The chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee faces the threat of prosecution for embezzlement, and his senior aides are experiencing a grave crisis of confidence. Concerned and panicky, some employees of the Congressman who have been with him for many of his 16 terms are working the halls on Capitol Hill looking for new jobs and angling for yet-to-be-filled Administration posts. Rostenkowski has denied that he engaged in any illegal or unethical conduct.

Rostenkowski probe takes look at r

By Ray Gibson
TRIBUNE STAFF WRITER

According to a trustee of the now-bankrupt carpet store, the grand jury subpoenaed the records of the 1990 carpet purchase several months ago.

The jury is conducting a wide-ranging inquiry into Rostenkowski's use of federal and campaign money. The panel also is examining Rostenkowski's unusual car-leasing arrangement and payments to family members for office rent in Chicago. And it has subpoenaed numerous members of his family, friends and staff.

In addition to these Chicago-based matters, several witnesses have told prosecutors and the grand jury that Rostenkowski traded stamps, purchased with federal and campaign funds, for cash at the House post office.

Federal law prohibits using campaign or congressional funds for personal purposes. The powerful Chicago Democrat, chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, has denied any wrongdoing.

His campaign committee, the Rostenkowski for Congress Committee, listed payments of $3,300 for carpeting bought in November and December of 1990, campaign finance reports show.

"We got the subpoena and turned the documents over to the FBI," said William Grabscheid, a court-appointed trustee for the bankrupt firm, Carpet Wholesalers Inc. The subpoena requested copies of the invoice for the purchase, he said.

An attorney familiar with the records said the invoice indicates the carpeting was delivered to 1372 W. Evergreen Ave., where Rostenkowsi and his wife live.

It is unclear how much carpeting the committee purchased because the amount is illegible on the invoice, the attorney said.

Rostenkowski's family owns three buildings at West Evergreen Avenue and North Noble Street. Besides the three-story home at 1372 W. Evergreen, he maintains a campaign office in an adjacent four-story complex at 1347-49 N. Noble St., where his sister lives.

Alvin Block, an attorney for the former owner of the carpet store, Allan Dolin, said Dolin was unaware that the purchase was being investigated.

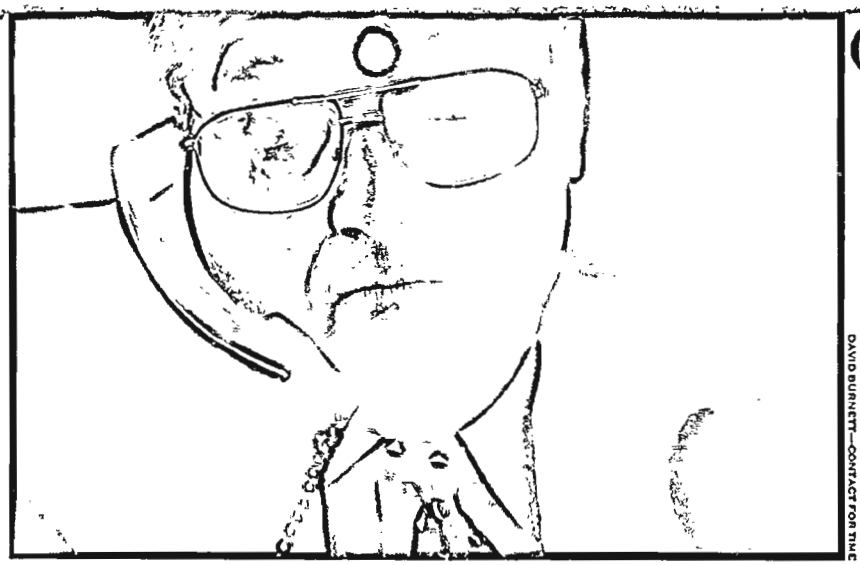
Last week, a former employee of a Wilmette car dealer told federal prosecutors that subpoenaed records suggest Rostenkowski used taxpayer funds to purchase two vans over a four-year period.

The employee, Kevin Stiritz, who was a finance manager for Wil-Shore Motors, said he told the grand jury that he saw nothing in the subpoenaed records to support Rostenkowski's contention that the vehicles were leased and that he or his campaign purchased them at the end of the lease period. And he said Rostenkowski's arrangement with Wil-Shore was unlike that of any other customer.

For years, Rostenkowski has used congressional money to lease vehicles for use in his district, a permitted practice. But in the case of the two vans, after the lease period expired, Rostenkowski or his campaign took possession of the vehicles.

Over the years, the payments of $1,050 a month covered the purchase price of the vehicles, Stiritz said. Overall, Rostenkowski paid more than $50,400 from his congressional expense account from 1987 to 1990 for the two vans.

Prosecutors are examining whether taxpayers were essentially financing the two vans and a third vehicle, a station wagon, that was also titled in Rostenkowski's name.



Stiritz said he reviewed the subpoenaed documents with federal prosecutors and the grand jury.

"I was asked specificially about the documents," said Stiritz, who quit the dealership in February. "Is there any indication there is a lease? Was there a lease? I was asked very specific questions by the grand jurors about the method-

DAVID BURNETT—CONTACT FOR TIME

NEVER ON HOLD Bennett is the man who counts in what he calls a "mean, mean town"

POLITICS

IT'S SUPERLAWYER !

Have a big name? Have big trouble? Who you gonna call? Bob Bennett.

WHEN VERY BIG PEOPLE IN WASHington find themselves in very big trouble, they dial 202-371-7000. Washington's consummate fixer Clark Clifford did; so did former Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger. Even Marge Schott, of Cincinnati Reds infamy. The number gets them the prestigious firm of Skadden, Arps, Slate, Meagher & Flom—and access to Robert Bennett, Washington's new superlawyer. Not since 1973 has a jury trial sent a Bennett client to prison—and he got that client off with three years for second-degree murder instead of 20 years for first.

So it was no surprise that Bennett has appeared at the side of Representative Dan Rostenkowski, the powerful chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, who has been implicated in the congressional post office stamps-for-cash scandal. "The chairman decided he'd better get a fighter," explains a Rostenkowski friend. "Bennett is a tough trial lawyer who's not going to make a deal." Rostenkowski—a major force in reshaping President Clinton's budget—could be indicted on charges far exceeding the 29-penny-ante stamp scam, including misuse of campaign funds. After days of stonewalling, the chairman called a press conference to deny the allegations, to put the government on notice that Bennett would not let his client simply twist in the wind and to show that Rostenkowski was going to fight it.

The action was classic Bennett. The lawyer likes to combine shrewd use of the media with concern for his client's state of mind. Says Weinberger, who was indicted (and pardoned) for his role in the Iran-contra affair: "Bob is crucial because of the terrorist approach of prosecutors. They hope the person they target will fold up, blow away and plead guilty."

Bennett, the elder brother of former drug czar (and Republican presidential hopeful) Bill, has spent 35 of his 54 years in Washington. But he was shaped by blue-collar Brooklyn and nuns that made him toe the line ("If you did something wrong, they hit you"). He was a Flatbush Boys Club boxing champ, such a scrapper that his mother paid him a nickel for each day he didn't get into a fight.

These days he's paid $1 million or so a year to take on fights. He doesn't cut much of a figure—beefy and rumpled. But as the courtroom action begins, he's Clark Kent emerging from the telephone booth in his cape—energetic, dominating, intuitive, shooting out questions like laser beams.

Apart from instructing juries on the prosecutor's evil ways, Bennett has two passions: fly-fishing in Montana, where he has a house on the Yellowstone River, and poker, which he plays with such friends as Supreme Court Chief Justice William Rehnquist, Justice Antonin Scalia and former Nixon adviser Leonard Garment. While others talk about politics, Bennett concentrates on the cards. He does not like to lose. Yet he is well aware of what he's best at. A fishing buddy remembers a Bennett attempt at gratitude. "You helped me so much," said Bennett, "I wish there was something I could do in return. Maybe you could get indicted." —By Bonnie Angelo. Reported by Nancy Traver/Washington

Decision on Indictment of Rostenkowski Said to Be Likely Next Month

By Kenneth J. Cooper
and Michael York
Washington Post Staff Writers

A decision on whether to seek indictments against Ways and Means Chairman Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) is likely next month, now that the Senate has confirmed a new U.S. attorney for the District, sources familiar with the investigation said.

Superior Court Judge Eric H. Holder Jr., confirmed on a voice vote Tuesday to a four-year term, is scheduled to take his oath early next month and, according to the sources, review the House Post Office investigation as one of his first official acts.

A federal grand jury has conducted a lengthy investigation of allegations that Rostenkowski embezzled thousands of dollars in House Post Office funds in transactions disguised as official stamp purchases.

That grand jury's term expires at the end of October.

That deadline gives Holder a few weeks to decide whether to ask the grand jury to indict Rostenkowksi. The new prosecutor could instead seek to extend the panel's term a second time.

A less likely option would be for Holder to present the politically charged case anew to another 23-member grand jury.

"We are very hopeful of getting a meaningful review by the U.S. attorney," said Robert Bennett, Rostenkowski's lawyer. "We believe there are very serious issues regarding the quality of evidence and the credibility of persons making the allegations."

The embezzlement allegations come mainly from former House postmaster Robert V. Rota, who resigned under pressure last year after two decades. In a July plea agreement entered in open court, Rota attested to having given Rostenkowski $21,300 since 1985 in exchange for House vouchers for postage or for stamps that had been purchased previously at the House Post Office.

Rota pleaded guilty to misdemeanors and agreed to cooperate with prosecutors.

In his review, Holder must weigh potential challenges to Rota's credibility, sources said. Holder declined yesterday to comment on the case.

Rota admitted in court papers that on two previous occasions he denied to investigators any knowledge of stamps-for-cash exchanges. He made the denials to federal prosecutors in 1980 and to House Administration Committee investigators in early 1992.

In addition, Rota has a nervous manner that was apparent in the courtroom when he pleaded guilty and even when he testified before House committees.

Prosecutors are not known to have witnesses besides Rota who saw the postmaster give Rostenkowski cash. The grand jury does have the official vouchers for postage signed by Rostenkowski.

The prosecution could elicit corroboration of a pattern of unlawful stamps-for-cash exchanges from Mary C. Bowman, longtime supervisor of House Post Office accounts until she retired in May 1987.

Court papers indicate the exchanges began when House Democrats elected Rota as postmaster in 1972.

Those papers cast Bowman—though not by name—as facilitating the exchanges by providing the cash for them to Rota. A five-year statute of limitations prevents prosecution of Bowman, 72.

In a brief interview, Bowman said she had firsthand knowledge of some of the transactions that Rota described, but Bowman did not specifically say she witnessed any of them.

Bowman said she had only done what House members had asked of her and at the time she had been assured—by whom, she did not say—that the transactions were legal.

Prosecutors have interviewed her, Bowman said.

One of her successors, James Smith, first told prosecutors of the alleged exchanges last year. It is not clear that Smith, a longtime employee who has since left his post office job, saw the exchanges take place.

Rostenkowski's stamp purchases appear unusual for a lawmaker able to send official mail free under the congressional frank. His stamp purchases, listed in published quarterly reports on House expenditures, far outstripped any other member's. Rostenkowski has denied wrongdoing and has accused the former U.S. attorney, Republican Jay B. Stephens, of conducting a political witch hunt.

Bennett complained of Stephens's televised statements earlier this year confirming the investigation and suggesting that indictments of Rostenkowski were imminent.

"Hopefully, the efforts of former U.S. attorney Stephens to poison the well of fairness will not be successful, and we will get a fair review, and the government will decline prosecution," Bennett said yesterday.

House post office scandal probe expands

New information surfaces about Rostenkowski

By Paul M. Rodriguez
THE WASHINGTON TIMES

The federal investigation into the House post office scandal is expanding to include questions about new information and is expected to delay a decision on whether to indict Rep. Dan Rostenkowski until well past October, The Washington Times has learned.

Full details about the expansion of the inquiry, now in its 25th month, or the new information could not be learned last night.

Calls last night to Mr. Rostenkowski's attorney were not returned.

But federal sources said yesterday that a report by The Washington Times, published last week, about missing payroll files on Mr. Rostenkowski's staff is one of the questions the grand jury is seeking answers to.

House officials discovered the documents were missing late last month when they tried to comply with a grand jury subpoena for Mr. Rostenkowski's staff payroll records.

The missing records prompted the firing of a longtime House employee who had worked exclusively on the Illinois Democrat's personnel files and the beginning of an internal investigation by House officials.

A House Administration subcommittee that oversees payroll operations and personnel records will hold a public hearing today to determine how the confidential records were lost.

Federal sources, who asked not to be identified, said last night the grand jury is looking not only into the missing documents but also new information about Mr. Rostenkowski and others implicated in the scandal.

"I cannot 'get into the specifics with you," said one of the sources familiar with the ongoing investigation. But "it has got something to do with Rostenkowski and his dealings in Chicago going back several years."

The source said the grand jury is looking at the relationships between Mr. Rostenkowski and several of his political associates, with whom the congressman has had business and other dealings.

"There's a lot of interest in the flow of money" to several of Mr. Rostenkowski's campaign and political action committees and "deals" involving local and federal legislation, the source said.

Mr. Rostenkowski, who chairs the tax-writing House Ways and Means Committee, is counted on by President Clinton and congressional Democrats to work of passage of the president's health care legislation.

Reports that prosecutors, led by U.S. Attorney Eric Holder Jr., had expanded their investigation came as a surprise to many on Capitol Hill, partly because of rumors that the inquiry was to be suspended.

However, a variety of federal sources yesterday sought to squelch reports that prosecutors would not obtain more indictments before the current grand jury's authority expires at the end of October.

At least six former post office employees, the former postmaster, and an aide to former Rep. Joe Kolter, Pennyslvania Democrat, have been convicted on several charges, including embezzlement and conducting illegal drug sales.

Mr. Kolter, Mr. Rostenkowski and Rep. Austin J. Murphy, Pennsylvania Democrat, have been caught up in the two-year probe of the post office and charges of corruption. All three have denied wrongdoing and have invoked their Fifth Amendment protection against self-incrimination in testimony before the grand jury.

Federal sources declined last night to confirm or deny reports that Mr. Holder, the newly appointed U.S. attorney, would seek an extension of the grand jury beyond its expiration.

"There are no considerations being given to the deadline on the current grand jury," a source said. "I expect it will be several more weeks if not months before you hear that [the investigation is] over."

"I can tell you this much — there are no indications that prosecutors feel their case is weak," said another person.

Current and former federal officials said yesterday that new leads in the investigation are not connected to charges of wrongdoing directly linked to the post office.

Those allegations focus on a money-laundering scheme, in which office stamps and expense vouchers were converted illegally for cash by a number of lawmakers and their staff.

Mr. Rostenkowski has been identified by persons, news reports and indirectly by federal prosecutors as having improperly converted about $23,000 in stamps.

He also has been implicated in news reports of having improperly billed the House for leased cars and office space.

Speaker Thomas S. Foley confirmed Oct. 12 that payroll records for Mr. Rostenkowski's office were missing when subpoenaed by the federal grand jury. The Washington Democrat said the missing paperwork authorizes the hiring of an employee or a change in salary.

The speaker said he was briefed on the matter recently and that as soon as he found out about the missing documents, he ordered staffers to inform the U.S. Attorney's Office immediately.

Among those questioned by the grand jury lately was a fired payroll counselor who worked on Mr. Rostenkowski's payroll records for nearly 13 years instead of being rotated every two years as other counselors were.

Mr. Foley said that "in the past, it would not have [been] the same payroll counselor" assigned to a congressman for so long.

Oversight unit asks for probe

210 Rostenkowski records missing

By Paul M. Rodriguez
THE WASHINGTON TIMES

A bipartisan House panel yesterday called on the House ethics committee to investigate the disappearance of hundreds of payroll records involving the staff of Rep. Dan Rostenkowski.

The decision by the special oversight panel of the House Administration Committee followed new testimony yesterday from senior House officials who confirmed that various procedural violations may have contributed to the missing documents.

House officials discovered the payroll authorization vouchers were missing in late September when they tried to comply with a federal grand jury subpoena for Mr. Rostenkowski's staff payroll records.

The hearing yesterday followed a report last week in The Washington Times about the missing records and details about the firing of a longtime payroll counselor who worked in the House Finance Office exclusively on the Illinois Democrat's personnel matters.

The grand jury has been probing Mr. Rostenkowski, chairman of the powerful tax-writing Ways and Means Committee, for nearly two years as part of a larger investigation of the scandal-plagued House post office.

Initially, House officials believed only a few of the Rostenkowski payroll vouchers, used to adjust employee salaries, were missing.

But two House officials — Leonard P. Wishart III, director of non-legislative affairs, and Michael Heny Jr., chief of the finance office — testified yesterday that 210 files were missing.

Mr. Wishart also said the payroll authorization forms for another three employees were missing and that some records for at least 12 employees were gone as well.

"As a result of this [information], the oversight subcommittee hereby requests that your committee reviews possible ethical violations of policies pertaining to the operation of the Finance Office," Rep. Charlie Rose, North Carolina Democrat and chairman of the panel, and Rep. Bill Thomas of California, ranking Republican on the panel, wrote to their counterparts on the ethics committee.

The ethics panel, formally called the Committee on Standards of Official Conduct, already has pending a separate probe involving allegations of non-criminal activities by current and former lawmakers and House staff at the in-house mail facility.

Because of the ongoing grand jury probe, which is headed by U.S. Attorney Eric Holder Jr., the bipartisan ethics panel has deferred any action on the post office investigation until the federal criminal probe is completed.

Speculation that the federal investigation was winding down was refuted Tuesday when federal law enforcement sources said prosecutors had expanded their inquiry and expected it to continue for at least several weeks.

Mr. Rostenkowski and two Pennsylvania Democrats — former Rep. Joe Kolter and Rep. Austin J. Murphy — have been caught up in the post office scandal.

Court papers accompanying the guilty plea earlier this year of Robert V. Rota, the former House postmaster, linked Mr. Rostenkowski and Mr. Kolter to a stamps-for-cash scheme that reportedly funneled thousands of dollars to the two lawmakers and "others."

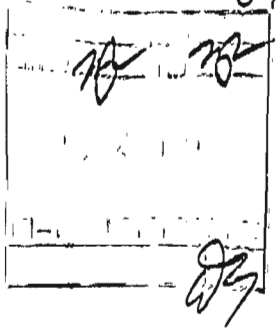
The three congressmen have denied wrongdoing and each has invoked his Fifth Amendment rights against self-incrimination in refusing to testify before the grand jury, which is set to expire at the end of October.

Federal sources have told The Times that prosecutors are not concerned about the impending expiration of the grand jury and that if no extension is granted by a judge, the prosecutors will empanel a new grand jury.

Mr. Wishart, a retired Army lieutenant general hired last year after disclosures of wrongdoing at the post office and the now-closed House bank, said he became aware of problems at the finance office only after the federal subpoena was served.

Despite the missing originals, he said the House was able to comply with the subpoena because of backup files kept by the finance office.

Mr. Wishart confirmed reports that, based on a random search of other payroll and personnel records, the only member whose office had missing records was Mr. Rostenkowski.



At least one of the three employees whose personnel files are missing is the daughter of a longtime Chicago-area politician with close ties to Mr. Rostenkowski, according to congressional and federal law enforcement sources who spoke to The Times.

Some of these sources, who asked not to be identified, said earlier this week that prosecutors have looked at the relationship between Mr. Rostenkowski and several of his political associates in Chicago politics for possible wrongdoing.

Also testifying yesterday was Bruce Avner, 52, the payroll counselor who was fired for tampering with his own payroll-deduction records. Initially he was told the discharge was because of missing Rostenkowski records.

Mr. Avner, who has testified twice before the grand jury since his dismissal last month, has denied any wrongdoing. Commenting on the missing payroll records, he said he filled out all the proper forms and handed them to his superiors.

. . . grand jury probes his finances

U.S. Delays Decision on Rostenkowski

Prosecutors Weigh New Allegations

By Kenneth J. Cooper
and Michael York
Washington Post Staff Writers

Federal prosecutors have delayed a decision on whether to seek indictments against House Ways and Means Chairman Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) to allow time to examine unspecified new allegations, sources close to the investigation said yesterday.

A decision on indictments had been considered likely this month. Eric Holder Jr. was installed as U.S. attorney two weeks ago, and the term of a federal grand jury that has investigated Rostenkowski for two years expires at the end of October.

The grand jury's investigation initially focused on financial irregularities by employees of the House Post Office. In the spring of last year, the focus shifted to charges of unlawful exchanges of official expense vouchers for postage stamps and cash by Rostenkowski, Rep. Austin J. Murphy (D-Pa.) and former representative Joe Kolter (D-Pa.), whose expense records were subpoenaed.

Former House postmaster Robert V. Rota has pleaded guilty to misdemeanors and alleged in court papers that he made available $21,000 to Rostenkowski under the guise of official postage purchases.

The grand jury inquiry has expanded several times to take in Rostenkowski's finances as well as his official and campaign arrangements for leased cars, direct mailings and offices.

It was unclear whether the grand jury's term would be extended so the 23-member panel could hear further testimony. Yesterday the scheduled appearance today of at least one witness was canceled. If the grand jury's term is not extended a second time, a new one could be impaneled and given a review of past testimony and access to secret transcripts.

The sources would not specify the new allegations about Rostenkowksi, but did say they concerned actions here and in his Chicago district. The extension of the investigation was described by sources as being "not for that long," suggesting a decision on whether to indict Rostenkowski would approach again in the coming months.

In another development, the House Administration Committee yesterday asked the ethics committee to investigate recordkeeping and procedural irregularities involving personnel records for Rostenkowski's office.

Leonard P. Wishart, House director of nonlegislative affairs, told a House Administration oversight subcommittee that Finance Office employees in September discovered 210 documents missing from the files of a dozen Rostenkowski employees. The documents authorized adjustments in pay, Wishart said.

The effects of the pay adjustments were recorded in financial reports published quarterly, while other public records signed by Rostenkowski certified that the employees did official work and how much they paid each month.

Wishart also acknowledged that Rostenkowski, contrary to a written policy, was allowed to have his personnel transactions handled by the same Finance Office clerk from the early 1980s until last January. Personnel clerks were supposed to rotate every two years.

Bruce Abner, who was Rostenkowski's clerk until he was fired for altering his own payroll withholding form, told the subcommittee that he kept signed, otherwise blank payroll authorization forms for Rostenkowski in his desk. That was also a violation of Finance Office policy, he said.

House Administration Chairman Charlie Rose (D-N.C.) and Rep. Bill Thomas (Calif.), the committee's top Republican, requested the ethics investigation but said they did not know whether the missing forms figured in any wrongdoing.

"Does it allow anybody to steal anything? I'm not aware that it does," Rose said.

Don't rush to judge Dan Rostenkowski

The Chicago business community is still trying to work off the shock of recognition that this city's most powerful friend in Congress, Dan Rostenkowski, may go down in flames. But before anyone jumps to conclusions, we suggest pausing to ask this question: What if Rep. Rostenkowski is innocent? It wouldn't be the first time that an easily manipulated press and overzealous prosecutors combined to build a case that won't stand up in court.

No doubt, the circumstantial evidence against Mr. Rostenkowski in the House cash-for-stamps scandal seems strong. What's more, corollary anecdotes carry a strong odor of Chicago-style political business as usual: Alleged improper diversion of public funds to run a phantom office on Chicago's Northwest Side and rental cars for family members have an all-too-familiar ring. So do allegations that the Chicago Board of Trade curried influence with the powerful Democratic chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee by hiring members of his family who weren't qualified for their positions.

But consider the following. The original U.S. attorney who prosecuted the House stamp case, Jay Stephens, now is running for U.S. Senate in Virginia—and he has two claims to fame. First, he sent Washington, D.C., Mayor Marion Barry to jail. Second, he got the ball rolling against Mr. Rostenkowski—a case marked from the start by improper leaks to the press. His team remains in place, and Mr. Stephens is helping them in an appalling display of unethical public accusations and comments. In an appearance on ABC-TV's "Nightline," Mr. Stephens predicted the imminent indictment of Mr. Rostenkowski over hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of fraud. In so doing, Mr. Stephens did something that no former prosecutor should ever do: publicly discuss information gleaned while he was in office and use that information to advance a political career.

There are other problems with this case. By the government's own admission, Mr. Rostenkowski's chief accuser, former House Postmaster Robert Rota, has lied on at least two occasions before during investigations of his office. An effective lawyer could easily destroy his credibility on the witness stand.

Yes, records show Mr. Rostenkowski was billed for a lot of stamps. But it's also true that the House Post Office was notorious for very sloppy accounting. Vouchers may have been generated by Mr. Rota and his staff on occasion to balance the books.

Then there's the question of motive. If Dan Rostenkowski wanted to amass wealth, all he needed to do was retire last year and convert more than $1 million in unused campaign funds for his personal use.

It's not our intent to judge Dan Rostenkowski one way or the other; if he is guilty, the punishment should be severe. But his fate should be left to the courts, not the press and unethical careerists.

Time for an August session, guv

Handgun ban

■ I find it amazing that a publication so steeped in research and accuracy can print such a fallacious and misguided editorial ("Business must face rising handgun crisis," June 28).

Figures from the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms state that only 7% of all criminals obtain their guns by lawful means. Just how do you expect a ban on handgun sales to affect this crisis of violence? How will a ban on guns protect employees in the workplace?

You have advocated support of tough national handgun legislation as a way for the business community to take a leadership role in the fight against violence in our country. I suggest you support aggressive prosecution of criminals and mandatory sentences for violent offenders rather than making these ridiculous statements that lead people to believe that gun bans would have any effect on violence. Criminals will get their guns regardless of legislation.

I am a gun owner and I have no problem with background checks or waiting periods. We already have them. But don't believe for a minute that the Brady bill, a ban on guns or any legislation will have the effect you seem to expect.

While you and many others focus on symptoms, the disease goes untreated. The violence our society endures is a result of the disintegration of the family and the deterioration of our values, not the availability of guns.

Behold the rarest of events in the 990s—a takeover battle.

In a struggle that could mean the oss of one of the few brokerage rms headquartered in Chicago, two ard-nosed investor groups are vy-g for control of Rodman & Ren-haw Capital Group Inc.

A New York brokerage firm, Jo-ephthal Lyon & Ross Inc., and eisty California investor Marshall eller are fighting a battle that's es-alating daily as each side boosts its wnership in the firm and jockeys or an advantage.

Yet despite all the drama, one agging question remains: Why do ey want this company so badly?

Rodman hasn't been able to produce a steady profit, even in the most lucrative years for the securities industry, and its productive assets—both personnel and operations—are fading. Over the past five years, it's lost a total of $1.2 million.

Neither side is offering to buy Rodman outright, but Josephthal Lyon and Mr. Geller appear ready to go head-to-head to take control of the firm.

"Even with Rodman's lack of earnings, with our strong earnings, we would have very strong combined profits," asserts Dan Purjes, chairman and chief executive officer of Josephthal Lyon. "I think that, together, it would be a very, very attractive firm."

Though events are changing almost by the hour, Josephthal Lyon, a fast-growing brokerage house with 800 brokers that already owns 7.6% of Rodman's stock, appears to be the front-runner.

Rodman would give Josephthal Lyon a synergy that would likely boost the profits of a combined firm. Josephthal would give Rodman's top executives, who will have a big say in any merger, a sense of job security.

In fact, Rodman would complement Josephthal Lyon's operations

Michael Jordan soars into publishing in a typically big way this fall, when Collins Publishers San Francisco releases his "photographic autobiography."

Collins plans to ship 250,000 coffee-table-style copies of "Rare Air: Michael on Michael" in mid-October, priced at $50 hardcover and $25 paperback.

The first printing could gross $7 million in retail sales, according to industry sources.

Rosty's net worth has quite a run

It has doubled since '89, dwarfing stamp issue

By PAUL MERRION

WASHINGTON—Meet Dan Rostenkowski, investment tycoon.

No, we're not talking about his stamp collection, but a personal portfolio of securities and real estate that appears to be worth well into the seven figures.

It's well-known that the Chicago Democrat could have retired last year and kept more than $1 million in campaign contributions for his personal use, which many consider to be the biggest argument against allegations that he used the House Post Office as a cash machine.

But financial disclosure reports filed recently by Rep. Rostenkowski and his wife, LaVerne, point to an even better Exhibit A for his defense: Their net worth appears to have roughly doubled over the last four years, to at least $691,053, and it could exceed $2 million.

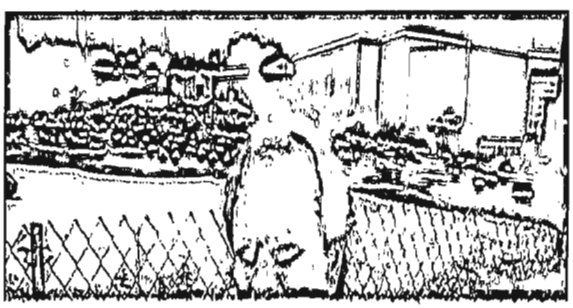
That doesn't include an undisclosed amount in a blind trust, which produced between $55,000 and $115,000 in income in the last two years—about a third to a half of their total outside income during that period. They reported no liabilities.

It also doesn't include the $1-million campaign fund nest egg, which he can no longer collect due to a change in the law.

Despite his humble home and rumpled clothes, Rep. Rostenkowski is now the second-wealthiest member of the Illinois delegation, after Rep. Sidney Yates, D-Chicago, according to a recent tally by Illinois Politics magazine.

While some of the Rostenkowskis' assets are tied up in retirement accounts, their combined investment income alone in any of the last four years—anywhere from $37,340 to a high of $178,002—far exceeds the amount specified in court filings related to the House Post Office investigation, which covers a period of several years.

While he has not been accused of anything and has stoutly maintained his innocence, Rep. Rostenkowski has been implicated in a cash-for-stamps scheme in which former House Postmaster Robert Rota has pleaded guilty to conspiring with unnamed members of Congress to embezzle money from their office expense accounts and campaign funds.



About $21,000 in stamp purchases cited in court papers reportedly match up with dates and amounts previously reported by Rep. Rostenkowski.

An alternative spin, of course, is that Rep. Rostenkowski's bulging portfolio reflects an alleged pattern vice-president in the Chicago office of Standard Chartered Equitor Group, a subsidiary of England's Standard Chartered Bank.

Business sent Mr. Bushby back to Vietnam, where he's keeping tabs on the rapidly emerging securities markets for his clients. As an employee of a British company, he's allowed to conduct transactions there that would be illegal for a U.S. company.

But if President Clinton lifts the trade embargo against Vietnam in September, a small cadre of local veterans like Mr. Bushby, who have risen to middle- and top-level executive positions, will be asked in the name of commerce to confront the strong emotions still swirling around America's most bitter and divisive foreign war.

It promises to be a difficult experience for some, something of a relief for others.

Reminders of the war are everywhere, from the enormous bomb craters that pockmark the countryside to the litter of abandoned military ordnance. In the larger cities, sidewalk vendors do a grisly trade in Zippo cigarette lighters, dog tags, watches and cameras, which they claim were pilfered from American casualties.

Michael Arrington, who served as a corporal in a Marine reconnaissance unit stationed in Vietnam in 1964, returned in 1986 with a group of travel industry executives at the request of Vietnamese government officials.

"I was walking to dinner in Da Nang and my foot kicked something," says Mr. Arrington, 50, president of Arrington Travel Center in Chicago. "I reached down and picked up an old, rusted American helmet."

Local entrepreneur Steve King served with a Marine rifle company that in 1970 saw heavy action near Chu Lai, an area referred to as the 'rocket belt" because of the frequency of rocket and artillery attack against the Viet namese people, but I don't think their political leaders have come clean. I hope the embargo isn't lifted," says John Mazzuchelli, 57, vice-president of Midwest Swiss Embroidery Co. in Chicago. He served as an Army platoon sergeant in 1968-69, commanding an armored personnel carrier.

Yet other veterans almost feel a yearning to do business in Vietnam, a sense that it might help put things right.

As a captain in a Marine rifle company stationed in the Central Highlands in 1965-66, Neal Meehan was engaged in some of the bloodiest search-and-destroy missions, most of them undertaken at night.

Desire to go back

Yet Mr. Meehan, 52, chief operating officer of In-Flight Phone Corp. in Oakbrook Terrace and former president and chief operating officer of Midway Airlines Inc., would like to go back, perhaps as a representative of his company's recently formed subsidiary, In-Flight Phone International.

"I believe the globalization of the economy and business is inevitable," he says. "Vietnam is an area

Mr. Bushby, who was once mocked by an employment recruiter for not having fled to Canada during the Vietnam War.

"Now, if you send a veteran back there, they'll get a lot more respect," he says. "The Vietnamese will respect you for coming back. They know you gave something up when you served there and that, by coming back, you're showing you have some regard for the place. I think it adds a level of permanence to your involvement with the Vietnamese."

The continuing controversy over the POW/MIA issue looms as a significant threat to normalizing relamet Chicago restaurant owner Lom Tan, to explore a possible import/export venture.

"The weirdest part for me was walking past the Hanoi Hilton," a bitterly nicknamed prison where captured U.S. airmen were held, says Mr. King, 42, president of Task Merchandising Inc. in Chicago. "I walked up to the gate and tried to look inside, but the guards came out. It was so eerie, like, 'Are any of our guys still in there?' "

Dr. Don Catherall, assistant professor at Northwestern University Medical School and executive director of Phoenix Institute in Chicago, which treats trauma victims, says the experience is more likely to be unnerving rather than truly traumatic.

Altered perspective

"It's not unlike returning to your grade school and looking at it with the eyes of an adult," says Mr. Catherall, a Vietnam veteran who wrote "Back from the Brink: A Family Guide to Overcoming Traumatic Stress." "There are going to be some strong feelings, but it won't be post-traumatic for most."

Veterans turned businessmen say they've been treated graciously during their visits to Vietnam, even by former Viet Cong and North Vietnamese Army soldiers.

And if there are strong feelings to overcome in going to Vietnam, many veterans believe the effort is worth it. They see a nation eager for investment, and Japanese, German, Korean, French and Taiwanese business people already hard at work.

"There are opportunities there that are phenomenal," says Mr. Arrington. "It's time to forget the past. This is a global economy, and the Pacific Basin is crucial to the world economy."

There's also a sense of vindication for some Vietnam veterans. Unlike the veterans of World War II, who were welcomed back into the working ranks after conquering Japan and Germany, Viet vets often tried to hide their Vietnam combat experiences when they returned to the U.S.

of financial self-dealing to enhance his congressman's salary, which he has always considered too low. A federal grand jury reportedly has subpoenaed a broad range of Rep. Rostenkowski's official and campaign-related financial records.

And personal wealth by no means precludes acts of wrongdoing.

It is possible that the gains in the Rostenkowskis' reported assets exceeded what he earned in salary, speechmaking fees and investment income over the last four years. But without more detail, it's impossible to conclude that the gains were based on anything besides an increase in the market value of those assets.

Reported investments

The Ethics in Government Act requires members of Congress to report any investment in excess of $1,000, but the value of each holding may be reported within broad categories, such as $5,001 to $15,000, or $100,001 to $250,000. Investment income is reported within similarly broad parameters.

With holdings ranging from blue-chip securities such as McDonald's Corp. and Pepsico Inc., as well as several more obscure investments, it's clear the Rostenkowskis have done well over the last few years.

For 1989, they reported year-end assets totaling between $330,015 and $980,000. By 1992, their assets had reached at least $691,053 and possibly almost $2.2 million.

For the 65-year-old Rep. Rostenkowski, who has been on the public payroll since the age of 24, the source of that wealth is not entirely clear. Between 1989 and 1992, congressional salaries ranged from $89,500 to $129,500. The current salary is $133,600.

He collected hundreds of thousands of dollars in speaking fees during that period, but all except $26,850 a year had to be donated to charity until 1990, when members were banned from keeping any fees.

One of the biggest gains was reported for rental property he owns with his sister at Evergreen Avenue and Noble Street, which is the office space attached to his home. The property became controversial when it was disclosed that his campaign fund rented the offices, which appeared from the outside to be little more than a "mail drop."

Reporters who have toured the space, however, have confirmed that it is used as the congressman's private office and a storage room.

An increase in value was reported for the Noble property in 1992, falling within a range of $100,001 to $250,000, up from $50,001 to $100,000 in previous years.

Despite recent reports that the property received a favorable tax assessment, the assessment on the rental property and the congressman's home went up 42% in 1991, while assessments of similar properties in the area rose much less.

"Anyone who's saying he got special treatment, obviously this wasn't the case," says Dick Vanecko, chief deputy of the Cook County assessor's office.

Wife drew salary

The reports show that Ms. Rostenkowski collected a salary between 1989 and 1992 from Confidence Insurance Agency, which the Rostenkowskis incorporated in 1967, according to Illinois secretary of state records. The company was involuntarily dissolved in November 1991 for failing to file an annual report and to pay the annual franchise tax, according to secretary of state records.

But Ms. Rostenkowski's salary from Confidence Insurance Agency was reported to be $3,735 in 1989, the last year that the amount had to be reported. It is not known why she collected wages from the agency last year, after it was defunct.

A spokesman for Rep. Rostenkowski referred questions to the congressman's recently hired defense attorney, Robert S. Bennett, who declined to comment.

GOP rips speaker over probe actions

By Elaine S. Povich
TRIBUNE STAFF WRITER

WASHINGTON—After an angry and emotional debate in which the speaker of the House was all but accused of manipulating a federal prosecutor, House Democrats on Thursday rejected a Republican effort to open records of the House post office investigation to public scrutiny.

The federal investigation of wrongdoing at the post office earlier this week indicated that Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.), the powerful chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, may have profited from a misuse of funds, possibly as much as $100,000.

Republicans, seeing that this Democrat so crucial to President Clinton's economic program was at the center of controversy, had demanded Wednesday that records of the special House task force that conducted an inquiry into the scandal before federal prosecutors became involved be made public.

During the bitter debate Thursday, Republicans accused Democrats of a "cover-up" because they argued against public release of the information.

Democrats countered by saying that the investigation into Rostenkowski and others would be jeopardized if the documents were made public, an argument advanced by the interim U.S. attorney, J. Ramsey Johnson, in a letter to House leaders Wednesday.

And in an unprecedented breach of House comity, Speaker Thomas Foley (D-Wash.) was practically accused of manipulating the prosecutor into taking the Democrats' side. Foley faced down his accuser, Rep. William Thomas (R-Calif.), and received an apology.

Under the resolution approved 244-183, the speaker will ask Johnson to advise the House when the documents can be released; then the House will take a vote on whether to make them public. One Republican, 242 Democrats and one independent voted to keep the records closed; 11 Democrats and 172 Republicans were opposed.

"Public disclosure will thwart the ability of the prosecutor to collect information," said House Majority Leader Richard Gephardt (D-Mo.). "It would possibly impair the U.S. attorney from completing his investigation."

But Republicans insisted that public disclosure of all of the investigatory documents would do nothing more than shed light on the issue. In fact, Thomas, who

Pain, trauma linger for kids in urban war

Lavercheray Johnson, 3 weeks old, died last January when her father allegedly threw her against a wall, fracturing her skull. The girl's siblings—ages 1, 2, 3 and 4—were in the apartment.

When 20-month-old Marcellus Harris was strangled with a telephone cord in June—allegedly by a 14-year-old baby-sitter—six other children under the age of 10 were present.

The 36 Chicago-area children under the age of 15 who have been killed this year have left behind young brothers, sisters, classmates, neighbors and friends. Although researchers are just beginning to piece together the short-and long-term effects of violence on such surviving children, they are discovering that the kids may suffer many psychological and neurological maladies.

"We are in the infancy of understanding the terrible things that this does to kids," said psychiatrist Markus Kruesi, director of the Institute for Juvenile Research at the University of Illinois Hospital. "Kids who are abused or neglected or exposed to violence, that exposure increases their likelihood of becoming violent.

"If you wanted to cook up a plot to make more children in the world grow into violent adults, this is an ideal recipe."

Kruesi and other experts believe that prolonged exposure to aggression and danger can turn children skittish and rigid, unable to tolerate the mildest insult or settle an argument without a gun or a fight.

Or the unrelenting stress can create passive, submissive individuals who become convinced that they are helpless to improve was a member of the task force that looked into the post office case last year, insisted that there was nothing in them that would damage the case against anyone.

In a loud, emotional speech on the House floor, Thomas accused Foley of having a phone conversation with Atty. Gen. Janet Reno prior to receiving the letter from Johnson asking that the documents be kept secret.

That brought Gephardt to his feet, challenging Thomas' statement. Thomas shouted that Foley should be brought to the floor immediately to reply. Seconds later, Foley strode onto the floor and angrily denied he had ever had a conversation with Reno.

"That is totally and absolutely incorrect," a grim Foley said. "I am surprised that the normal courtesy that exists between members would not have been shown in this case."

Pointing his finger at Thomas, Foley said that not one question had been asked of him until the accusation was made on the floor. At the end of his remarks, Thomas apologized and admitted he "had no factual evidence" that the call had taken place.

That set the tenor of the debate.

The House "won't 'fess up to its dirty little secrets," charged Rep. Scott Klug (R-Wis.). But House Majority Whip David Bonior (D-Mich.) countered that the House should "stand here and affirm our principles of law, order, justice and decency."

Meanwhile, Rostenkowski went about his other business Thursday, holding meetings throughout the day on the economic plan.

Pausing to chat with reporters outside the committee room door where he was holding the meetings, Rostenkowski discussed the progress the committee members were making. But when he was asked how the investigation was affecting his budgetary work, he did not answer and gently pushed away a reporter's tape recorder.

Rostenkowski voted with the other Democrats to delay release of the investigatory documents.

A year ago, a House task force on the post office report found nothing to suggest that House members had engaged in embezzlement, although it criticized the conduct of post office employees.

In his guilty plea released Monday, former House Postmaster Robert Rota admitted he lied to House investigators, The Associated Press reported, quoting from one of the unreleased documents.

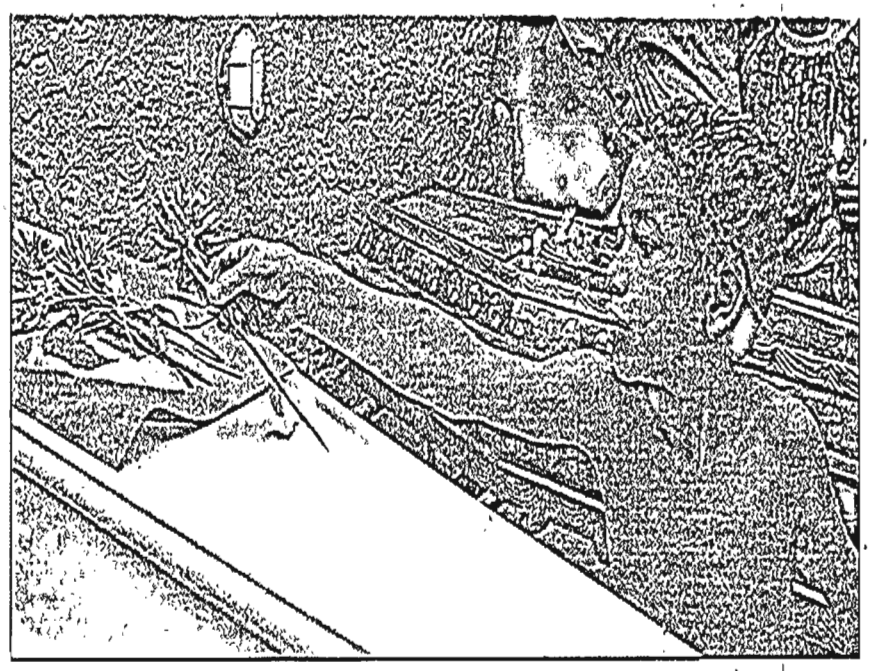
CULVER CITY, Calif.—The French bank that owns Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer on Sunday replaced Alan Ladd Jr. with veteran Hollywood executive Frank Mancuso as MGM's boss..

Bank officials also said Credit Lyonnais will spend more than $1 billion to reduce the studio's debt and make at least $210 million available to jump-start its United Artists operations.

Credit Lyonnais, owned largely by the French government, became the unlikely owner of the studio after it bankrolled Giancarlo Parretti's 1990 takeover of what was then MGM-UA Communications Co. for nearly $1.4 billion. Paretti defaulted on his loans, and the bank foreclosed.

The virtual collapse of what once was a leading Hollywood studio has spawned fraud and racketeering lawsuits and countersuits between Credit Lyonnais and former owner Kirk Kerkorian. The FBI is conducting a criminal investigaton of the case.



Credit Lyonnais, one of the world's 10 largest banks, is seeking to sell both studios and retreat from direct participation in Hollywood. To do so, the bank, which eventually would be forced to sell MGM under U.S. regulations, must re-establish the studio as a credible producer of entertainment.

The bank has enlisted Michael Ovitz, a top Hollywood agent and head of Creative Artists Agency, to help turn MGM around.

Ovitz has been moving Creative Artists into marketing terrain once dominated by Madison Avenue and dealmaking that was handled in the past by Wall Street investment banks. He helped broker the sales of MGM-Universal Studios and Columbia Pictures to Japanese investors.

Mancuso, 60, has spent more than three decades in the entertainment industry, most recently serving as chairman and chief executive of Paramount Pictures. Ovitz suggested bringing Mancuso into the effort to rescue MGM.

NEW YORK—House Speaker Tom Foley said Sunday that he has no knowledge of any missing documents on the House post office scandal and that once the U.S. attorney's investigation into the matter is completed all documents should be released.

"We're going to cooperate fully and entirely—fully and entirely—with the U.S. attorney's office in seeing that all documents available that are proper to their investigation be released," Foley said on CBS-TV's "Face the Nation."

"When this investigation is over, those documents, I think, in fact, ought to be released." But he added that Congress should abide by the U.S. attorney general's request to have documents withheld until the investigation is completed.

"I have no knowledge of any missing document. But certainly we're going to allow the U.S. attorney to make another review to ensure there are no missing documents," he said.

The scandal centers on allegations that Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.), the powerful chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, embezzled House Post Office funds.

House Republicans tried to force public disclosure last week of all documents in the House post office scandal but failed in a near-party-line vote.

Rostenkowski, who is a central player in pushing President Clinton's budget plan through Congress, Saturday denied the allegations of embezzlement. He has not been indicted on any criminal charge and said Saturday that the accusations against him are "unfair, false and baseless."

assumes that the purpose of education may be to enable a child to master the TV remote control, but not to master the world.

Obviously, a Chicago schoolchild will not have absorbed the elements of wheat farming from her environment, as would most children from Iowa. She will, however, have grown up in a city where the world's largest agricultural commodity exchanges operate and account for thousands of jobs, and in a state whose largest industry is agriculture.

The amount of money available for her education will be determined to some degree by the needs and income of farmers and agribusiness in her state.

She may, while being "TV-influenced," hear news reports about the president's energy tax dying a death of a thousand cuts, one of them inflicted by farm interests worried about the cost of running People, should children in a poor Chicago neighborhood waste time learning something as useless to their lives as how to count to 100 in Swahili?

Fairness. Utility. Whatever the ostensible concern, the result is the same: a constricted notion of education that assumes where a child starts out is where she will end up.

Is it too much to suppose that a child from Chicago's South Side might someday go beyond her neighborhood—might travel, perhaps, to Africa with knowledge of agricultural techniques that would put an end to those harrowing, grotesque television pictures of starving children?

Is it too much to suppose that education, even now and even in urban America, can be a liberating experience, inspiring children not just to dream, but to follow their dreams?

Political passion vs. legal process

Nothing is so much fun for a politician as an opponent's scandal, and Republicans in the U.S. House of Representatives may be forgiven for enjoying the spectacle of Democrats coping with the serious charges made against one of their titans, Ways and Means Committee chairman Dan Rostenkowski of Chicago. But at some point the fun can becomes irresponsibility, as it has for the House GOP.

A brouhaha erupted Thursday on the floor over whether to release the records of the House post office investigation conducted by a special House task force. Federal prosecutors are also digging into the matter and last week elicited a guilty plea from former House postmaster Robert V. Rota of providing a "largely untraceable source of illegal cash" to several House members, including a "Congressman A," generally believed to be Rostenkowski.

The Democrats balked at the Republican demand for instant publication on the reasonable ground that the publicity could only jeopardize the prosecutors' work. You don't have to take their word for it: Interim U.S. Attorney J. Ramsey Johnson wrote a letter to House leaders asking them not to make the records public because doing so would have "a significant adverse effect on the ongoing criminal investigation."

That request was the subject of the loudest exchange on the floor, after California Republican William Thomas suggested that Speaker Thomas Foley had solicited the letter to justify his action. Foley angrily denied doing any such thing and Thomas was forced to apologize for his groundless charge.

There is nothing to be gained by haste in releasing the evidence and plenty to be lost. The evidence against the House members, if it is credible, will come out soon enough. Until then, the needs of criminal justice should continue to take precedence over the preferences of the Republicans, whose apparent motive is not to inform the public but to embarrass the opposition.

A very hard landing, indeed

He flew through the air with increasing unease,
This puzzled blimp pilot let down by the breeze.
His actions were futile—no control of the ship!
The craft hit a rooftop, done in by a rip.

—Anon,
with apologies to George Leybourne

You remember the July 4 story of Bigfoot, a colorful advertising blimp that lost altitude over New York and crash-landed atop a seven-story apartment building, instantly decorating the structure for the Independence Day holiday.

The deflating experience, caused by an undetected rip in the blimp's bag, ended better than it might have for pilot Lee Cermak and copilot Pat Russell. Russell wasn't seriously hurt, but broken bones kept Cermak hospitalized for more than a week.

"We kind of slapped down hard; the impact went through my spine," said Cermak as he prepared to return home to Oregon, where he plans to resume his career in blimps in the fall. "I didn't intend to visit New York in this manner."

That's not all Cermak had to say to reporters, however. Perhaps appreciating that chances to grab a few seconds of fame in the Big Apple come along very infrequently, the Bard of Blimpdom delivered himself of this poem:

It was July 4, 1993.
There was three: a beautiful airship, a copilot and me.
We were just cruising down the river on a Sunday afternoon—the beautiful airship, the copilot and me;
When all of a sudden, she did a flip and a flop,
And on a Manhattan rooftop, we all came to a sudden stop—the airship, her copilot and me.
And now, like you, I wonder why
There's only two—the copilot and me.

Well, what's to add after that? Only this: Keep the day job, Mr. Cermak.

"Anon" promises to do the same.

Foley to Open Post Office Data

By Michael Briggs
Sun-Times Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON—House Speaker Thomas S. Foley on Sunday pledged to open post office records to prosecutors who said documents appear to be missing" from files ought in an embezzlement investigation that has ensnarled Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.).

"We are going to cooperate fully and completely with the U.S. attorney's office in seeing that all documents available that are proper to their investigation be released," Foley said.

He said Acting U.S. Attorney J. Ramsey Johnson will be allowed to double-check post office records. "I pledge my cooperation," Foley told CBS News. He said he knew of no missing documents.

Among the records prosecutors have described as "unaccounted for" are recent correspondence files for former House postmaster Robert V. Rota, who pleaded guilty last week to conspiracy and embezzlement of post office funds for several congressmen. Without specifically naming the Ways and Means Committee chairman, Rota implicated Rostenkowski and has agreed to cooperate with prosecutors as part of his plea bargain.

A letter from Johnson to House Administration Committee Chairman Charlie Rose (D-N.C.) surfaced late last week on Capitol Hill. The prosecutor did not specify what other files "appear to be missing" from documents previously provided to investigators.

"At this stage in our continuing investigation, we simply want to make sure that no records were overlooked or forgotten," he wrote.

The letter also detailed how House lawyers in the past, despite "repeated requests" by prosecutors, delayed for months before making post office records available to be reviewed.

Last spring, when former U.S. Attorney Jay B. Stephens repeatedly complained at press conferences about attempts to obstruct the post office investigation, Foley had said that all requested records had been turned over to a federal grand jury.

A Capitol Hill source acknowledged in March that there had been "difficulties" satisfying some requests for records, but the source, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said "nobody was trying to stonewall." Prosecutors privately expressed concern that Rostenkowski allies in Congress were uncooperative.

Rostenkowski broke his silence Saturday for the first time since Rota pleaded guilty, asserting his innocence and denouncing "unfair, false and baseless allegations."

President Clinton, who is relying on Rostenkowski to help steer through Congress a package of taxes and spending cuts to reduce the budget deficit, is expected to appear with Rostenkowski tonight in Chicago at a Democratic Party fund-raiser.

Treasury Secretary Lloyd M. Bentsen on Sunday reasserted the Clinton administration's confidence in Rostenkowski's leadership of the conference committee that is hammering out the budget bill.

Bentsen told NBC News the legal cloud over Rostenkowski has not hampered him in Congress.

"I think Chairman Rostenkowski and the conferees are committed to trying to get this package passed, and that will be their priority," Bentsen said. Asked if Rostenkowski was distracted by his legal troubles, Bentsen said: "I have been in negotiations with Chairman Rostenkowski, as chairman of the Finance Committee, where we went 15 hours straight. So I know about that fella's energy and commitment."

There have been calls for Rostenkowski, who has not been charged with any crime, to resign as chairman. Committee chairmen who are indicted are required to do so under House Democratic rules.

House Minority Whip Newt Gingrich (R-Ga.) told CBS that Rostenkowski should not surrender his chairmanship under the current circumstances.

"I don't think anyone can presume anybody is guilty until they have had an opportunity to clear their name," Gingrich said.

On Rosty's Turf, Views Unchanged

By Neil Steinberg
Staff Writer

The allegations swirling around Dan Rostenkowski and his financial dealings don't seem to have affected how his Northwest Side constituents view the congressman.

Those who already disliked him had their reasons—some unexpected—before the scandal broke.

And those who like him—and most of those asked Sunday said they still do—apparently are going to continue supporting him.

"Why don't they leave him alone? It's really not big money involved," said Sophie Madj, proprietor of the Busy Bee Restaurant, dismissing any talk of financial improprieties. "He is a good man, and I think people should leave him alone."

Sophie Madj

"I like him. He's been in this neighborhood a long time," said retiree John Paulson, 72. "Everybody thinks he's dishonest, but you never know. Money is a temptation."

Those critical of Rostenkowski have old grievances they're eager to air.

"If he's guilty, they should throw the book at him," said Richard Zymantas, 43, out walking his miniature schnauzer. Zymantas criticized Rostenkowski for not cleaning up after his own dog or relating well to fellow dog owners.

He told of a time when his Schnauzer sniffed over toward Rostenkowski's dog.

"He said, 'Keep your dog away from me,' " said Zymantas. "I said: 'I'm just walking my dog like you.' He's a grumpy old guy—I think he should retire."

"It's payback time," said a homeless man resting on a bench in Pulaski Park a few feet from Rostenkowski's Chicago home. "At night he sits there, looks out his window, sees us and calls the police. The police come and say, 'The congressman doesn't like seeing you. Move on.' But we have nowhere else to go. If he gets indicted, he brought it on himself. If you're in Congress, you're supposed to help the homeless, not call the police to chase them out of sight."

Supporters said it wouldn't make sense for Rostenkowski, at this point in his career, to commit crimes of the magnitude cited in the press.

"We like him as a man. I believe he's not guilty," said Mohammed Majeid, a grocery store owner. "He's been there 20, 25 years. He's not going to do something wrong."

Decision Expected Soon On Rosty Indictment

WASHINGTON—Federal prosecutors are expected to decide next month whether to ask for an indictment of Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) from the federal grand jury that has investigated embezzlement from the House post office.

The Senate confirmation this week of Eric H. Holder Jr. as U.S. attorney for the District of Columbia cleared the way for the resolution of the investigation.

Holder takes over from U.S. Attorney Jay B. Stephens, the Republican who said he was on the brink of winding up the investigation when he was forced out of office last April by Attorney General Janet Reno.

Holder's swearing-in is scheduled for mid-October, but he will be briefed before then on pending investigations, including the House post office case.

Holder has been a Superior Court judge in the District of Columbia since 1988. He was a trial attorney from 1976 to 1988 in the public integrity section of the Justice Department.

He told the Senate Judiciary Committee during his confirmation hearing that convictions of a federal judge in Pennsylvania for taking bribes to fix cases and an embezzlement conviction of an FBI agent were among his most significant cases during the period when he was "specializing in official corruption."

Rostenkowski's attorney, Robert S. Bennett, has engaged in a publicity campaign to raise doubts about evidence that apparently implicates the Chicago congressman.

"Hopefully, in the coming season the professional prosecutors at the U.S. attorney's office and the Department of Justice will take a hard look at the quality of their evidence and the credibility of their potential witnesses and decline prosecution," Bennett wrote in a Sept. 16 column in the Washington Times. "This would, of course, take political courage."

Without naming Rostenkowski, prosecutors in July implicated him in an embezzlement scheme when they accepted a guilty plea by former House Postmaster Robert V. Rota. As part of a plea bargain in which Rota agreed to cooperate with prosecutors, he admitted providing cash to House members in transactions disguised as postage stamp purchases.

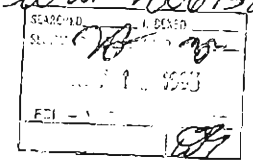
Rota pleaded guilty to embezzling $21,300 for a "Congressman A" on dates and in amounts that match House expense account records for Rostenkowski postage purchases.

Former post office supervisors James C. Smith and Mary C. Bowman also have testified before the grand jury. In interviews with the Chicago Sun-Times, both said they provided cash to the postmaster that Rota told them was for select congressmen.

The grand jury investigation of Rostenkowski has expanded beyond the post office into other aspects of his campaign, congressional and personal finances. Witnesses who appeared before the grand jury this summer were asked about vehicles Rostenkowski leased in Chicago.

Documents subpoenaed by the grand jury show a Wilmette auto dealer handled Rostenkowski's acquisitions of three vehicles as purchases and not as government leases, as Rostenkowski maintained.

The government has tried to determine if Rostenkowski illegally used $73,000 in government funds to buy the vehicles and then disguised the payments as government leases for mobile offices.



Rostenkowski has denied wrongdoing. He has used campaign funds to defray legal expenses for himself and aides subpoenaed to testify before the grand jury. He recently formed a legal defense fund.

Rostenkowski records subpoenaed

Postal grand jury's request reaches to '57

By Paul M. Rodriguez
THE WASHINGTON TIMES

The federal grand jury probing the House post office has issued new subpoenas to the House for records dating back to 1957, including all documents on Rep. Dan Rostenkowski since he took office.

The two subpoenas are part of an effort by the grand jury to piece together a complete picture of the Illinois Democrat's dealings since he became a congressman in 1959 by exploring transactions by him and his office.

The grand jury has been investigating embezzlement, drug sales, improper cash transactions and money laundering at the post office.

The subpoenas, both dated Oct. 29, seek records detailing Mr. Rostenkowski's handling of his office's financial dealings, especially in the past five years.

One subpoena seeks "any communication" between Mr. Rostenkowski, the influential chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, and the House Administration Committee between 1959 and 1993 "concerning expenditures of official funds."

It also demands "all documents made available for members of the House consisting of letters, pamphlets, notebooks, books or memorandum relating to the rules, regulations or policies governing the expenditure of funds" between 1957 and 1985.

The second subpoena is narrower in scope and asks for documents on Mr. Rostenkowski's office-supply purchases between Jan. 1, 1988, and Jan. 31, 1993.

Specifically, the second subpoena seeks "all documents, copies or originals, in any way related to Rep. Dan Rostenkowski or his office including but not limited to sales tickets, special order forms, invoices, receipts, certificates of deposit, returns, monthly statements, payment records for non-official purchases, checks and money orders" issued to or received from the congressman or any of his offices.

"They either got something or else they're trying to just torment everybody," said one of several congressional sources who spoke with The Washington Times on the condition of anonymity.

"It's really kind of mind-boggling if you ask me," said a second source familiar with the grand jury's request.

"Who knows if the records go back that far?" a third source said.

The sources, including current and former congressional and federal law enforcement officials, said the latest subpoenas — and delays in the sentencing of some people convicted in the post office scandal — suggest that the criminal probe will continue well into next year's political season.

"The timing just couldn't be any worse for him," said one of the sources, referring to Mr. Rostenkowski and his ability to garner political support in his hometown, Chicago, for a 19th term in office.

"We're hearing complaints from some of the precinct captains that they can't get their people to collect enough signatures to put him on the ballot for the primary," said a source with close ties to the Illinois Democratic Party.

"It just gets worse for this guy," said one of several Democratic officials who asked not to be named. "It [the grand jury probe] goes on and on."

Next month will mark the second full year that federal prosecutors have been formally looking into accusations of criminal wrongdoing at the congressional mail facility, which operates in five locations on the House side of the Capitol.

As first reported in The Times in January 1992, the probe initially centered on sales of cocaine and thefts by post office employees. The probe quickly expanded to check charges of money laundering by higher-ups and some members of Congress.

Six former clerks, the former chief of staff and the former postmaster of the facility have been convicted on charges ranging from illegal drug sales to embezzlement.

An administrative assistant to former Rep. Joe Kolter, Pennsylvania Democrat, has also been convicted of drug dealing as a result of the ongoing criminal probe.

Mr. Kolter, Mr. Rostenkowski and Rep. Austin J. Murphy, Pennsylvania Democrat, have been implicated, mostly by anonymous accusers, in a variety of ethical and criminal violations.

All three have denied any wrongdoing, and they have invoked their Fifth Amendment rights by refusing to testify before the federal grand jury.

Robert V. Rota, the House postmaster forced to resign in March 1992, has reportedly told prosecutors that he illegally diverted about $23,000 in phony stamp purchases to Mr. Rostenkowski during the 1980s.

Other former post office clerks have reportedly told prosecutors that Mr. Rostenkowski improperly used his congressional privilege of free mail to send his golf clubs and personal items around the country and nonofficial mail overseas.

In addition, prosecutors have investigated reports that Mr. Rostenkowski improperly used official House funds to lease cars and rent district office space from a building he and his family own.

Furnishings in the congressman's Chicago offices and his use of campaign money also are being reviewed.

Led by new U.S. Attorney Eric Holder, prosecutors empaneled a second grand jury this month to pick up the pace of the previous grand jury, which expired at the end of October.

Dan Rostenkowski Goes Down In History

The chairman of the Ways and Means Committee doesn't want to be remembered as a machine hack from Chicago. But his current troubles raise the question: Has he really left Ward 32 behind?

HE'S A BIG GUY with a big appetite for red meat, so he likes to eat at Morton's of Chicago, an upscale Georgetown joint where the steaks are measured in pounds, not ounces. Danny Rostenkowski, the Chicago Democrat who chairs the House Ways and Means Committee, has eaten at Morton's so many times they named part of the place after him. The sign on the wall reads: "Rosty's Rotunda."

He's a big guy, 6 feet 2 and well over 200 pounds, and he strides into Morton's with the lumbering gait of his favorite movie star, John Wayne. He's never alone. He's always got an entourage of congressmen, ex-congressmen and frequently a corporate lobbyist, who tends to pick up the check.

Kernels of Knowledge

How does teacher Sue Sizer-Gillette know when her students have enjoyed their field trip to Clagett Farm? "If they're really tired and they smell," she says, "then I know it's been a successful day."

Sizer-Gillette, who teaches biology and environmental science at Eleanor Roosevelt High School in Greenbelt, is a regular visitor to the Upper Marlboro site, which plays host to more than 3,500 area students every year. The 283-acre working farm, a former tobacco plantation, was bequeathed to the Chesapeake Bay Foundation 11 years ago by Charles Clagett, who made it clear in his will that he wanted the place used for educational purposes.

Though the farm is actually 14 miles from the Chesapeake (and has the distinction of being the foundation's only landlocked facility), it is used to teach students about the estuary's far-reaching ecosystem. "I'm constantly amazed at how divorced [kids] are from the bay," says Sizer-Gillette, who uses the opportunity to tell them how chemical runoff from agricultural operations can affect the bay's waters.

The trip to gently rolling fields of corn, wheat and organic vegetables is a working adventure. "They get there in the morning and shovel stalls. They sling cowpies," says Sizer-Gillette. "Then they feed the cows. Kids aren't used to that," she adds. "It's scary."

Side excursions may include a canoe trip on the nearby Patuxent River, where they get the lowdown on the importance of marshes to the bay, and an afternoon on the Chesapeake aboard a workboat or skipjack. "They pull the dredge for oysters, set crab pots and do water quality tests," says farm manager Michael Heller. "You just don't get that hanging out at the mall or watching TV."

The farm is a for-profit enterprise, says Heller, who lives on the premises and supervises a small staff of educators and interns. The harvest is sold like any other; while the vegetables are organically grown, the field crops are treated with a small amount of commercial pesticide.

For Sizer-Gillette, the Clagett Farm visit brings a creative slant to teaching. "It's a classroom without walls," she says. "I think we rely too much on books and not enough on experiences." —TONY GLAROS a walkway. At Morton's, they owe Rosty. Back in the early '80s, he did a favor for his pal Arnie Morton: He came in a couple of times with Tip O'Neill, who was then speaker of the House, and suddenly the place became very popular with lobbyists.

Sometimes, Rosty spots one of his favorite lobbyists sitting at a table with a client and he goes over and slaps his pal on the back and tells the client that this guy is the best damn lobbyist in town.

"That's always helpful," says Tom Downey, a former New York congressman turned lobbyist. "You're taking your client to Morton's, and the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee comes over and puts his arm around you and says how great you are. That only has to happen once or twice and you're set."

Before dinner, he orders a martini or two—Bombay gin straight up with a couple of those little onions. At Morton's, they don't give you a menu; the waiters come around with a cart loaded with huge slabs of raw meat and you take your pick. Rosty likes his steaks cooked Pittsburgh-style—black on the outside, blue on the inside. He washes them down with his favorite wine, Chateauneuf-du-Pape. He loves the sound of that name and he gleefully rolls those mellifluous French syllables out in his gravelly Chicago accent: shat-toe-noof-doo-pap.

Ordering at Morton's is a ritual that some people find quite bizarre. Andy Jacobs, for instance. Jacobs, an Indiana Democrat who serves on Ways and Means, is a vegetarian and has been for decades, but Rosty kept pestering him to come to Morton's and finally Jacobs accepted.

"I'm sitting at this end of the table and Danny's holding court at the other," Jacobs recalls, "and some stevedore brings around these dead animals and shows 'em to you. Which one do you want? And how do you want it further desecrated by fire? And Danny's at the head of the table and he bellows out to the stevedore when the cart gets to my position: 'HE'S MY FRIEND, MAKE HIM LOTSA VEGETABLES!' "

Over dinner, the chairman tells stories—great stories, usually about politics, which is the only line of work he's ever been in. He's 65 now, and he's held elective office since shortly after he reached voting age. Before that, he watched his father, who was a powerful Chicago pol back when Danny was in diapers. Rosty tells great stories about his old friend Jack Kennedy, and his old boss Mayor Dick Daley, and his political hero, Lyndon Johnson.

One time, he says, he got a call from President Johnson, who told him that Chicago was going to get federal money to improve the JFK Expressway. Great! The JFK serves Rosty's neighborhood on the Northwest side. So Rosty calls Mayor Daley to tell him the good news and Daley says, Hmmmm, the JFK, huh? And 20 minutes later, Rosty gets another call from LBJ, who says, I made a little mistake, Danny, the money's not for the JFK, it's for the Dan Ryan . . . Which just happened to be the highway that served Daley's neighborhood on the Southwest side. That son-of-a-buck Daley called LBJ and put in the fix!

Which is the theme of many Rostenkowski stories: power and how it really works in America—with back-room deals and phone calls from the right guy. He tells his tales with great gusto and grand hand gestures, and when the punch line comes, his huge face lights up with childlike delight. Danny Rostenkowski loves the sheer fun of the great game of politics.

At least he used to love it. It's not so much fun anymore, now that he's got this post office scandal hanging over his head. For more than a year, federal prosecutors have been investigating several allegations about Rostenkowski, including the charge that he embezzled $21,000 through bogus stamp deals at the House Post Office. Rosty denies any wrongdoing. As this magazine went to press, reports indicated that the new U.S. attorney, Eric H. Holder Jr., would make a decision on whether to seek an indictment sometime this month.

There's a cloud hanging over Rostenkowski, and it's made him nervous, he'll admit that.

He was born into the sleazy Chicago political machine, and for years he was dismissed as a ward hack, a machine pol, "Mayor Daley's man in Congress." Over and over again, he told friends and interviewers that he wanted to overcome that image, to become a respected national leader. And in the mid-'80s, he finally did it, engineering the most sweeping revision of the tax code in generations, and rising to something approaching statesmanship. "No man has ever grown more in the Congress," wrote Tip O'Neill. Now, just when he's Bill Clinton's point man on passing a health care bill, this low-budget scandal threatens to pull him right back into the muck.

These days, when Rosty walks into Morton's—or any other public place—he'll see people look up, recognize him and then quickly turn their heads, and he wonders: Are they thinking about the stamps? Is that why they looked away?

When he lays his big head down on his pillow at night, he thinks: What are they gonna say about Dan Rostenkowski in the future? Will it be tax reform or just those goddam stamps?

These days, when Rosty walks into Morton's—or any other public place—he'll see people look up, recognize him and then quickly turn their heads.

BIG JOE'S BOY

Rosty's got a million great stories, but he never tells the one about how two of his father's precinct workers were shot dead in front of his house back in 1938. He says he doesn't remember much about it. That makes sense: He was only 10 years old.

Their names were Leo "Cowboy" Moszinski and Bruno Switaj. They'd been out barhopping all night, and shortly after 6 in the morning, they were sitting in a parked car in front of the home of their boss, Alderman Joseph P. Rostenkowski. A car pulled up next to them and stopped. The driver kept the motor running while his passenger got out and fired four bullets into Moszinski and Switaj. Then the shooter jumped back into the car and the driver stepped on the gas.

"I haven't the faintest idea of what happened or why," Alderman Rostenkowski told reporters. "Both men worked for me but I don't know of any enemies they might have had."

The newspapers reported that the two men had been running a slot machine racket, but the murders were never solved. Neither was another shooting at the same site three months later:

JOE ROSTENKOWSKI, TOP RIGHT, AND STATE SEN. DAN ROSTENKOWSKI BY CHICAGO SUN-TIMES; ROSTY IN JULY BY REUTER/BETTMANN; WITH O'NEILL BY JAMES K.W. ATHERTON

Somebody fired five shots into the tavern on the first floor of the Rostenkowski home on the same night that shots were fired into the office of an alderman allied with Rostenkowski.

Chicago politics was rough in those days, but Joe Rostenkowski was rough too. Built like a bull—stocky and powerful with a huge round head—he was known as Big Joe Rusty. For three decades, from the '30s through the '50s, Big Joe was king of the 32nd Ward. He was an alderman, which meant that he sat on the Chicago City Council, and he was a Democratic ward committeeman, which meant that he controlled hundreds of patronage jobs and helped decide who ran for which office. Like many ward bosses, he was also an insurance agent, which meant that he sold policies to any businessman who wanted to insure that he stayed on the right side of city government.

Big Joe Rusty rose to power in the Depression, when the 32nd Ward was very Polish and very poor. To his impoverished constituents, Big Joe was frequently the only hope against destitution. He'd give them a basket of food or a bucket of coal or get their sick relatives into a charity hospital or put somebody in the family on the city payroll. Sometimes, the story goes, when an immigrant from the 32nd Ward took a citizenship test, he'd be asked, "Who's the president of the United States?" and he'd reply, "Joe Rostenkowski."

Of course, Chicago ward bosses were seldom saints and they required something in return for their favors. People who got food were expected to vote right. People who got jobs were expected to kick back 1 or 2 percent of their salary to the ward organization, and to serve as precinct workers during campaigns. And any businessman who wanted a favor—a permit, a zoning change, a city contract—generally had to pay cold cash for the service. Mathias "Paddy" Bauler, the legendary saloonkeeper pol who ran the 43rd Ward, summed up the Chicago political system in a now-famous quote:

"Listen: You think we should do things for them people for nothin'? They got to have somethin' done—raise the cab fare or get a city parkin' lot lease or somethin' like that—holy Chri', you don't think they expect to get it for nothin', do you? What's fair is fair, you know."

Big Joe Rusty was, in fact, a good buddy of Paddy Bauler. In 1952, the Chicago Daily News reported that Big Joe had three no-show employees on his committee payroll and one of them was Paddy Bauler's bartender. The next year, in an anti-corruption editorial, the Sun-Times called Bauler, Big Joe and a couple of other aldermen "the council's worst specimens." In 1955, the same paper termed Big Joe "an undeviating member of the plunderbund that now controls the council."

Into this way of life Daniel David Rostenkowski was born in 1928, the only boy in a family of three children. He remembers helping his father distribute clothes and a ham or a duck with all the trimmings to the unemployed at Christmastime.

During the war, Big Joe sent his son to St. John's Military Academy, a Catholic boarding school in Wisconsin. He enrolled as Daniel Rosten—Anglicizing one's name was common among Polish Americans back then—and he thrived at the school, winning 14 letters in baseball, football, basketball and track. In his senior year, he was voted most athletic, most popular—and runner-up for most conceited.

"I loved it there," he once told the Chicago Tribune. "It was one of the greatest things my father ever did for me. I wasn't the alderman's son anymore. I was on my own. I started even. It taught me responsibility and how to make my way on my own."

After graduation, he joined the Army and served a stint in prewar Korea. When he returned, he played minor league baseball in Florida until his father summoned him back. "You'll never be Babe Ruth," Big Joe said. "Come home."

Dutifully, Danny returned. Big Joe got him a job as an investigator for the city's corporation counsel, and he took some night classes at Loyola, although he never got a degree. One night, he had a blind date with a beautiful blonde named LaVerne Pirkins, who wore a dress in his favorite color, purple, and in 1951 they were married.

Then, in 1952, Big Joe used his power as ward committeeman to squeeze out the incumbent state representative and run Danny for the legislature. The kid put the "-kowski" back on his name and won the election, becoming, at 25, the youngest member of the Illinois House. Two years later, the party bosses dumped an incumbent state senator and ran young Rostenkowski instead, and Danny became the youngest member of the Illinois Senate. Obviously, Chicago politics wasn't like St. John's—he didn't make his way on his own—but he did make good. By all accounts smarter and smoother than his father, Danny was soon winning editorial endorsements from the same Sun-Times that vilified Big Joe. He was, the paper said, "a vigorous and able exponent of progressive legislation."

In the 1955 mayoral primary, Big Joe backed the party's choice, Richard J. Daley, over a Polish American rival. Daley won big, but not big enough to carry Big Joe, who lost the aldermanic election in the heavily Polish 32nd Ward. Later, Daley rewarded Big Joe for his loyalty by appointing him superintendent of sewer repairs, a job that, according to one alderman, required no work. Which left Big Joe plenty of time to be ward committeeman, a post he held for another five years before passing it on to his son, who kept it for 28 years.

"I'm going to rebuild with youth," Big Joe told reporters. "I'm going to get young men and young women into the organization to give it life. And I'm going to build it around my son, the senator."

With Rostenkowski,

'there's always an angle,' John Sherman says. 'You're always doing business. That's his nature. That's his culture.'

MAYOR DALEY'S MAN IN CONGRESS

Boss Daley had a great gift for Dan Rostenkowski in 1958: a really good job, clerk of Superior Court.

But Rostenkowski had another idea: He wanted to run for the seat of retiring Congressman Tom Gordon.

Congressman? It was unthinkable! It wasn't that the kid was setting his sights too high. Quite the contrary, he was setting them too low. In those days, no ambitious young Chicago pol wanted to be a member of Congress. The real go-getters wanted to be a committeeman or an alderman or parks commissioner—something that gave them a power base and some patronage jobs and a chance at the ultimate office, which was, of course, mayor of Chicago. Not to mention the chance to rake in all those gratuities from people who wanted a driveway permit or a stop sign in front of their house. Members of Congress, by contrast, were off in Washington, far from City Hall, where the action was. Back then, Congress was where the machine sent you to retire, a cushy job given to loyal old coots who were over the hill. That's why the average age of the Chicago congressional delegation was 72.

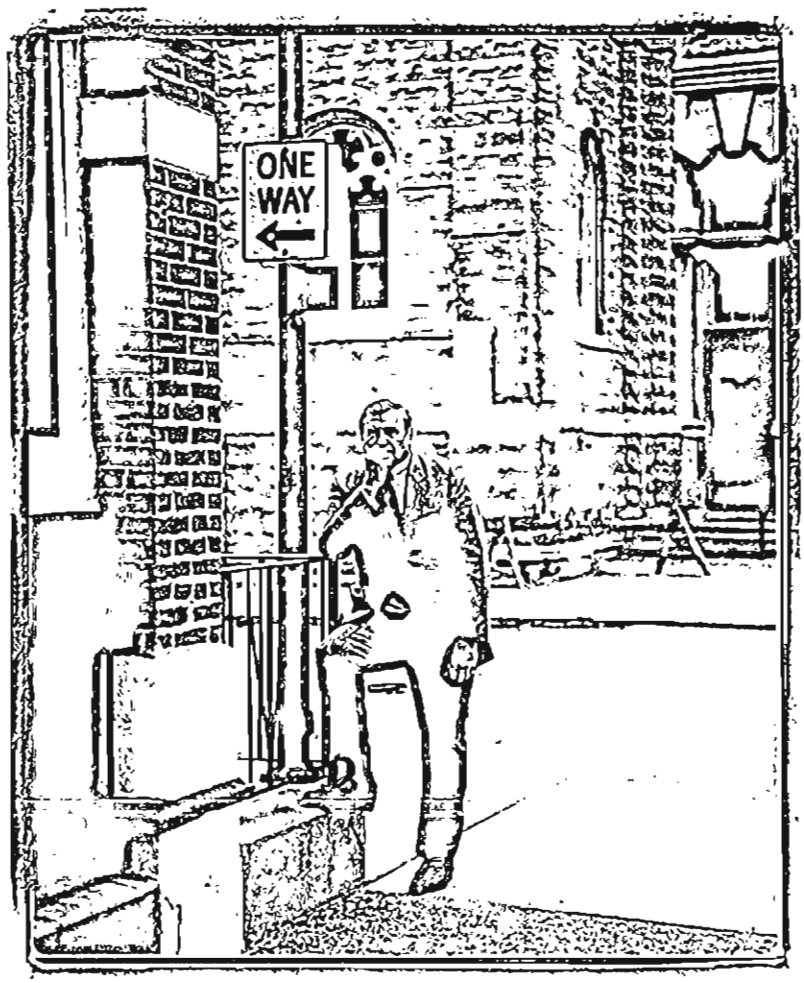
It's time to send young guys to Congress, Rostenkowski suggested to Daley. Then they can build up seniority and take over the powerful committees that decide where the bacon goes. That's what the Southerners do, and it's time to do the same.

Daley was skeptical but he said okay, and in January 1959, at the age of 31, Rostenkowski became the youngest man in the House of Representatives.

He took LaVerne to Washington but she wasn't impressed. Everybody was from somewhere else and there were no real neighborhoods, not like back home. She told her husband that she was staying in Chicago with the kids—they had four daughters—and if he wanted to work in Washington, he'd have to commute.

He's been commuting ever since, sleeping a couple of nights a week in a little apartment he calls "the junkyard."



In the old days, before House members got airfare allowances, he used to drive to Washington in a station wagon with a few other representatives. They'd leave about 10 on Monday night and arrive by noon Tuesday, in time for the first House session of the week. Then on Thursday afternoon, when the House recessed, they'd hop in the wagon and drive back. They'd get into Chicago early Friday morning and Rostenkowski would go brief Boss Daley on what was happening in Congress.

In Chicago, Rosty worked hard on constituent services. Maybe too hard. In 1963, a local judge ordered him to stop paying constituents' parking tickets with party funds. Rosty admitted that he spent as much as $1,400 a year on this particular service but he insisted that he wasn't "fixing" tickets. "We don't fix them. We pay the fines. Of course, we try to get them reduced to the minimum."

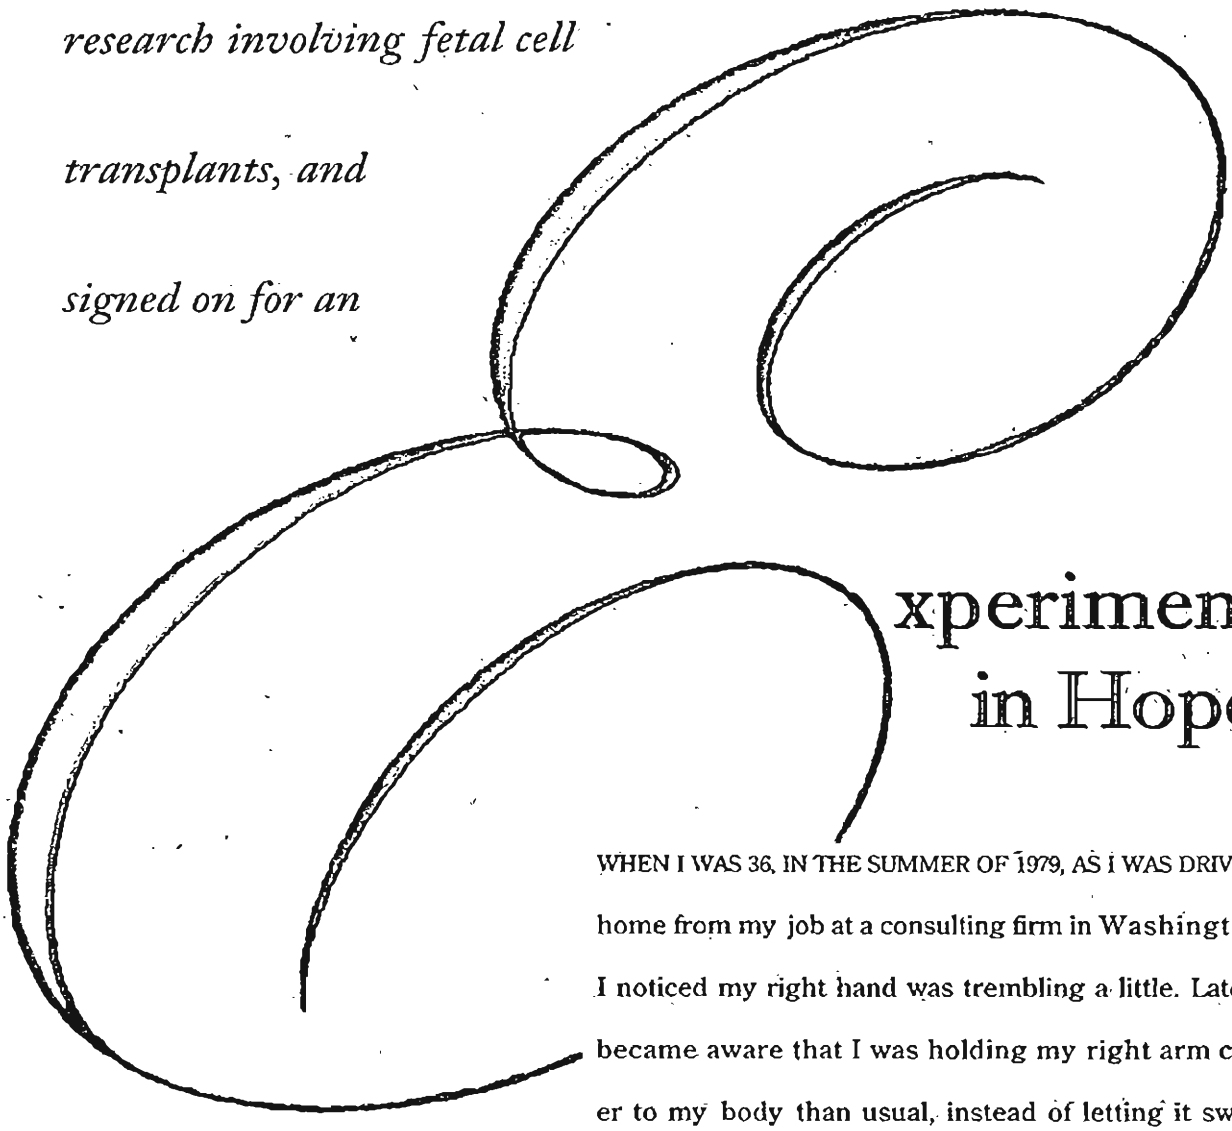
In Washington, Rosty quickly became known as "Mayor Daley's man in Congress." It was a slightly insulting title—who wants to be somebody else's man?—but it did open a lot of doors. In those days, Congress was run a lot like the Chicago machine: A few old men at the top called the shots and young members were expected to shut up and do as they were told. "You put in your time, you rose through the ranks and you didn't rock the boat," he recalls.

Rostenkowski followed those rules. He wasn't a leader in the crafting of public policy, but he was very skillful at the inside politics of the House—the vote counting and vote trading and pork barreling. He also had a gift for impressing older, powerful men. Speaker John McCormack took a liking to the handsome young Polish kid, and so did Lyndon Johnson. Soon, Rostenkowski was moving up. In 1963, he was chosen as the House's youngest assistant whip. The following year, Tom O'Brien, Chicago's man on Ways and Means, died at age 85 and Rostenkowski took his place.

Ways and Means was an incredible coup for a 36-year-old with only five years' seniority. It was the committee that met behind closed doors and decided who would have to pay taxes—and who wouldn't. It was controlled by the legendary Wilbur Mills, a man who liked to bring the tax code home at night for a little light reading. Rostenkowski wasn't that studious or that interested in taxes—far from it—but he was very excited about another of the committee's functions: For Democrats, Ways and Means was the "committee on committees," which meant that its 17 Democrats decided what committees all their colleagues would serve on. That meant enormous power—the ability to reward friends and punish enemies.

That power helped when Rostenkowski ran for chairman of the House Democratic Caucus in 1966. He won, and at the tender age of 38, he was in the House leadership.

HE IS THE WALRUS



John Sherman was watching a nature show on TV when it suddenly hit him: Dan Rostenkowski is a walrus.

Sherman worked for Rosty for years before quitting to run a Virginia country inn, and when he saw a walrus cavorting on TV it reminded him of his beloved old boss. Up on the rocks, the walrus waddled around awkwardly, looking uncoordinated and out of place. But then it slid off the rocks and swam underwater, where it was as graceful as a hawk.

"I think that's very analogous to Rostenkowski," Sherman says. "He is not somebody who spends a lot of time in the higher social echelons. Because he's not of continued on page 34 the blow-dried generation of politicians, he can seem a bit awkward in Washington . . . But when he has a political job to do, then he gets underwater, and he's as graceful and powerful as anything I've ever seen. It's something wonderful to watch. He is that walrus."

Rostenkowski is on the rocks when it comes to abstract political theorizing, but when it's time to get a bill passed, he slips underwater and glides. "I like the floor action," he said years ago. "You know, the maneuvering, the counting heads, getting people lined up."

What he really loves to do is pass legislation. That sounds absurd: After all, passing legislation is a lawmaker's job. But many congressmen prefer posturing and crafting sound bites and appearing on TV. Rosty could care less about that stuff. What gets him excited is grabbing a bill the way a fullback grabs a football, running it past all the obstacles and carrying it over the goal line. He loves the game of it. And he loves to win.

"He's a politics guy versus a policy guy," says one Ways and Means staffer. "He's more interested in doing the deals than in what the deals contain. He's a closer, that's his skill . . . If the caucus said, we're going to pass a bill to go back on the gold standard, he wouldn't say, 'Why?' He'd say, 'Okay.' "

"He likes the process. He likes being in the middle of the give-and-take, dealing with the president and the speaker and the Senate," says former representative Tony Coelho. "He knows getting something through the House is only half the battle. The conference with the Senate is the real battle. So you put things in the House bill that you know will be taken out in conference and you leave things out of the House bill that you know will be in the Senate bill. It's like a chess game—you outmaneuver your opponents—and that's what he's very, very good at."

"He loves to do the deals," says ex-congressman Downey. "To him it was: 'I'm giving you this, what are you giving me?' So if I would say something like, 'Look, I think we need to help these poor people.' He'd say, 'Fine, what are you going to give me?' And I'd say, 'No, no, this is not for me, this is for them.' And he'd say, 'No, no, if you want this, this is for you.' . . . If I wanted to help these people, fine. He was prepared to help them too. What was I going to give him?"

Rostenkowski has spent so long in the world of deal-cutting and horse-trading that he sometimes forgets that there's more to life than swapping favors.

"I'll tell you a funny and revealing story about this guy, who's been in ward politics all his life, where friendships are essentially based on a kind of give-and-take," says Sherman. "He had his appendix out and when he got home I called him." This was long after Sherman had left Rosty's staff. "He answered the phone and I said, 'How are you?' And there was sort of a pause and he said, 'What do you want?' . . . That was his instinct. It wasn't unfriendly. It was sort of natural. 'So you called. What are we doing here?' Well, we weren't doing anything. I just wanted to see how he was."

Sherman laughs at the memory. With Rosty, he says, life is a series of deals. "There's always an angle. You're always doing business. That's his nature. That's his culture. I laughed about it with him."

Ways and Means determines who will pay taxes, and, consequently, people who dislike paying taxes frequently want to be friendly with the chairman.

ROSTY'S REVENGE

Dan Rostenkowski was a rising star in the House of Representatives until he followed Lyndon Johnson's orders at the 1968 Democratic National Convention in Chicago. It nearly ruined his career.

Outside the convention hall, the Chicago police were bludgeoning anti-war demonstrators and dragging them into paddy wagons. Inside the hall, Sen. Abraham Ribicoff of Connecticut denounced "Gestapo tactics on the streets of Chicago," and an angry Mayor Daley stood up and screamed obscenities at him.

Watching on television at his Texas ranch, President Johnson got mad and called the convention hall. Dan Rostenkowski, working the phones backstage, took the call and got an earful of LBJ's wrath. Bellowing, Johnson told Rosty to get rid of Carl Albert, the diminutive House majority leader who was chairing the convention, and restore order. "Get that SOB out of there!" Johnson yelled. "Take the gavel away from him!"

Rostenkowski did what he was told.

Three years later, Albert, who had a long memory, became speaker of the House. When his new majority leader, Hale Boggs, recommended Rostenkowski for the job of whip, the third-ranking post in the House, Albert turned him down cold. No way would he give the job to the man who'd helped humiliate him. So Tip O'Neill became whip. Within six years, Albert had retired, Boggs had died and O'Neill was speaker.

Nor was that the only setback Rostenkowski endured. Albert's candidate, Olin "Tiger" Teague, unseated Rosty in the election for chairman of the Democratic Caucus. The twin defeats left him devastated. "It destroyed me," he told the Chicago Tribune years later. "I just wanted to crawl in a hole and die. I had been on the crest of a wave and now I was drowning."

In the '70s, Rostenkowski was reeling. In 1972, the anti-war reformers who controlled the Democratic convention denied Rosty a seat as delegate. In 1974, Wilbur Mills, Rosty's mentor on Ways and Means, was found drunkenly cavorting with an Argentine stripper at the Tidal Basin. And then, in 1975, the House, egged on by a freshman class of post-Watergate reformers, stripped Ways and Means of Rosty's favorite function—its power over committee assignments. After that, Rostenkowski, the former go-getter, started skipping committee meetings, and he soon earned a reputation for laziness.

"He was in a rotten mood," his aide Jim Healey later told a reporter. "He lost interest."

In those days, about the only issues that could stir passion in Rostenkowski were congressional pay raises, which he strongly supported, and limits on representatives' outside earnings, which he strongly opposed.

"I'm sick," he grumbled after losing one fight for a pay raise.

On the Ways and Means Committee, Rostenkowski often seemed, as one newspaper account put it, "half indifferent to tax questions." But for one memorable moment in 1976, that changed. Rosty was assigned to the conference committee that was negotiating a tax bill with the Senate when he noticed that Abe Ribicoff was pushing a provision to benefit the insurance industry, which was powerful in his home state. This was the same Abe Ribicoff who'd denounced Daley's "Gestapo tactics" at the convention eight years earlier. The prospect of revenge roused Rosty from his torpor. He hit the books, spending hours mastering obscure details of tax law. When the provision came up in conference, Rosty shot it down with a blast of erudition that nobody expected.

"I went into the room," he recalled with a big grin years later, "and just kicked the brains out of them."

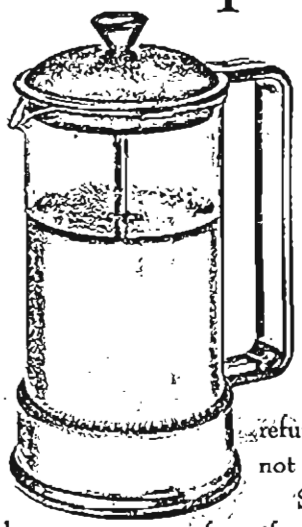
'THE HOGS WERE REALLY FEEDING'

Ronald Reagan's 1980 landslide buried many House Democrats, but it did wonders for Dan Rostenkowski.

Swept away in the Republican onslaught were John Brademas, the House majority whip, and Al Ullman, who had succeeded Wilbur Mills as chairman of Ways and Means. Rostenkowski was directly in line for both jobs. He could take either one. The choice was his.

Most of the pols and pundits figured he'd take the whip post. It was the job Carl Albert had denied him years earlier and it would put him on a direct path to become speaker. Besides, a whip does exactly what Rosty was best at—vote-counting, arm-twisting, horse-trading. He was a natural for it. On the other hand, the chairmanship of Ways and Means is a more cerebral job. You've got to study the tax code, as Mills did, and master arcane legal and economic issues. Rosty's no scholar, the smart money said. He's a lazy Chicago machine pol. He'll go for whip.

"The chairmanship offered a terrific risk of failure," Sherman recalls, "but it also offered a tremendous opportunity to mitigate the sort of burly, ethnic Daley machine image."



After a month of waffling, Rostenkowski decided to take the challenge, to prove himself as a man of substance. "I made that decision," he said a few months later, "because otherwise they'd have thought I was running away from becoming the student of tax law."

Immediately, the new chairman faced a very tough test—Reagan's tax-cut plan. The president proposed a three-year 25 percent tax cut, with most of the benefits going to affluent taxpayers. The idea was that the rich would get richer and invest more money, which would make the economy grow. Republicans called it "supply-side economics." Rostenkowski called it "apple pie in the sky." But he knew it was very popular. People love tax cuts. So Rosty crafted an alternative plan—a two-year 15 percent tax cut with the benefits skewed a bit more toward moderate income taxpayers.

"I want a tax bill that can win," he told his committee. "I don't do anything that I don't fight to win."

"It was Danny's first bill, and he knew Wilbur Mills had never lost a bill, and Danny wanted to emulate Mills," Coelho recalls. "He wanted to be perceived as somebody you had to deal with, somebody you couldn't run over."

To attract the support of the boll weevils—conservative Southern Democrats—Rosty started adding sweeteners to his bill: a break for the oil business, a break for the sugar business, a break for the real estate business . . . It was Rosty in his horse-trading mode, but this time the Republicans just grinned and added bigger sweeteners to their bill. So Rosty added even bigger ones to his bill. It was a bidding war, and soon both bills were loaded with literally billions of dollars in tax breaks for special interests.

"The hogs were really feeding," Reagan aide David Stockman later said.

A week before the July 1981 showdown, Rosty was talking tough. "We've been sparring and sparring and now the audience is starting to say, 'You better start hitting each other. We came here to see a fight.' " He was confident enough to stake his reputation on the outcome. "I don't know whether I'm a good chairman yet," he said. "I'll know next week."

The next week, Reagan's bill won big.

"They beat the heck out of me," Rosty said recently. "But, you know, I learned."

At the time, he was less philosophical. It was his first test in his new job and he'd failed it. He felt awful, and he took it out on Kent Hance.

Hance was a Texas boll weevil who'd had the audacity to sponsor the Reagan bill while sitting on Rosty's committee, and the chairman decided to torment him. First, Rosty took his committee on a junket to China. Except for Hance. He wasn't invited. Then, when they got back to work, Hance found that the rollers were removed from his chair in the committee room. He had an aide put them back on. The next day they were gone again. This went on for weeks. Later, the committee took a bus trip to Baltimore. This time Rosty let Hance come along. Hance climbed on the bus and noticed that the front seats were labeled with the names of committee members, but Hance's name wasn't there. He stepped farther back on the bus and saw seats bearing the names of committee staffers, and his name wasn't there, either. He kept moving back and finally found his name—on the seat next to the toilet.

"He was sending a message," says Hance, now back in Texas. "I understood that. I'd read stuff about that fellow Capone. He was from Chicago too, so I didn't mind the way Rostenkowski sent messages. It could have been a lot worse."

THE KING OF HONORARIA

When you're the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, people just love to give you money and other nice things.

The blind trust did very well, later earning Rostenkowski more than $50,000, according to the Sun-Times, on an investment of only $200.

Ways and Means determines who will pay taxes, and, consequently, people who dislike paying taxes frequently want to be friendly with the chairman. They're only too eager to buy him fancy dinners or fly him halfway around the world to play golf, or pay him big bucks to speak to them, or donate large sums to his campaign committee.

It's quite a temptation for any mortal. And Dan Rostenkowski did not manage to resist it. Quite the contrary. With characteristic gusto, he grabbed the goodies with both hands.

Although he had the safest of seats, Rosty raked in more than $2 million in donations to his campaign committee and his personal political action committee between 1985 and 1991. Although he is not an orator to rival Churchill, he regularly led his congressional colleagues in the collection of honoraria, which are the fees paid for speaking to special-interest groups. He was, in fact, the undisputed King of Honoraria. In 1984, he topped the list with $93,000, and he was still leading the league in 1990, the last year House members could keep honoraria, when he took in $310,000. Due to House rules, he could only keep about $27,000 per year. The rest had to go to charity. But he kept right on orating, perhaps because many of the speeches were delivered to groups convening in lovely locales with good golf courses. Rosty loves golf. During the winter, he can frequently be found golfing, on some lobbyist's tab, in such warm places as Miami and Maui and Palm Springs and Palm Beach.

Of course, none of these activities was illegal. And, as Rosty's friends are eager to point out, nobody is buying the chairman's vote. No way. In fact, Rosty sometimes takes a perverse delight in accepting a campaign contribution and a free golf junket from some group and then getting up and telling them that they've been too greedy and he's going to close their favorite tax loophole. In such circumstances, he likes to pass on a bit of Chicago folk wisdom: "Pigs get fat," he says, "but hogs get butchered."

Of course, Rosty has also been known to help those who help him.

In 1984, in a late-night conference committee meeting, Rostenkowski inserted into a tax bill a provision that helped a few hundred commodities traders—most of them from Chicago and many of them contributors to his campaign committee—in a dispute they were having with the IRS. The provision, called a "giveaway" by Sen. Howard Metzenbaum, was worth at least $300 million to the traders, according to Common Cause, the Washington watchdog group.

In 1986, annuity brokers, upset that the Senate version of a tax bill had closed their favorite loophole, held a fund-raiser in Los Angeles and collected $83,000 for Rosty's personal PAC. When the chairman emerged from the subsequent House-Senate conference committee, the loophole was safe. Newspapers cried foul, but Rosty's spokesman said there was "no quid pro quo."

And then there's Presidential Towers, a 2,346-unit apartment complex in Chicago. In 1980, according to the Chicago Sun-Times, Rostenkowski inserted into a tax bill a provision that permitted Presidential Towers to receive a $159 million federally insured mortgage without meeting a federal requirement that 20 percent of the apartments be reserved for low-to-moderate-income residents. Two years later, he inserted into another bill a provision that saved the project an estimated $7 million in taxes. Rosty said he was just trying to help rebuild a blighted part of Chicago, but the Sun-Times noted that one of the project's developers was Daniel J. Shannon, Rosty's close friend and former partner in a real estate venture, who was then running the chairman's blind trust investments.

The blind trust did very well, later earning Rostenkowski more than $50,000, according to the Sun-Times, on an investment of only $200. Presidential Towers did less well, later defaulting on its $159 million federally insured mortgage, the largest default in the history of the Federal Housing Administration.

POLITICS, CHICAGO-STYLE

able portion of the city's Caucasian population panicked.

It happened because the old Democratic machine was divided: One faction supported incumbent Mayor Jane Byrne while another backed Richie Daley, son of the legendary Boss, who died in 1976. With the white vote split, Harold Washington, a black congressman running on an anti-machine platform, won a narrow plurality and became the official Democratic nominee in a city that hadn't elected a Republican mayor in more than 50 years. This led many white ward committeemen to do what they had previously considered unthinkable—endorse a Republican, Bernie Epton. "The people in my area just don't want a black mayor," said one defecting ward boss. "It's as simple as that."

Dan Rostenkowski, boss of the 32nd Ward, was not among those bolting the party, but his tepid endorsement of Washington came late and lacked anything approaching enthusiasm. Meanwhile, many Rostenkowski precinct workers were canvassing the ward, urging voters to support Epton. One of those voters was Luis Gutierrez, now a freshman in the House. Gutierrez, who supported Washington, got so angry that Democratic precinct workers were asking him to vote Republican that he chased them down the street, yelling to neighbors, "Don't listen to them!"

During the campaign, Gary Rivlin, then a reporter for a Chicago weekly, called the 32nd Ward office pretending to be a confused voter and asking for advice. He was urged to vote for Epton. Rivlin, author of Fire on the Prairie, a book on Chicago in the Washington era, blames Rostenkowski for the actions of his precinct workers. "If he had made it clear that they couldn't work for Epton, they wouldn't have worked for him," he says. "These guys are cowering in their boots at the ward boss. He controls their jobs."

On the day before the election, one of Rostenkowski's precinct captains pulled a gun on a Washington campaign worker named Sal Quinones. He threatened to kill Quinones, and pulled the trigger—twice. The gun didn't fire, and the precinct captain fled, according to a lawsuit filed by Quinones. Following a jury trial, Quinones won a civil judgment of more than $100,000.

It was a time when the bitterly divided city desperately needed leadership, Rivlin says, and Rostenkowski failed to provide it. "To me, pretending to help his party's own nominee while clandestinely working for the other side in an overtly racial fight is at least as scandalous as any charges of corruption."

Asked for comment on the actions of the precinct captains, Rostenkowski's spokesman said only: "He supported Harold Washington in 1983."

Angry at Rostenkowski, Gutierrez, then a social worker, decided to run against him for ward committeeman in 1984. He thought he had a decent chance to win because he is Puerto Rican, as is a large segment of the ward. But he soon found that ethnic ties are no match for the Rostenkowski machine.

"No Latino businessman would put my posters up. None," he recalls. "I'd hit them with ethnic pride, and they'd look at me, like, Are you crazy? Against Dan Rostenkowski? Who the hell are you? You'll be gone tomorrow and I'll get a call from his people the next day. No thanks."

Despite such talk, Gutierrez campaigned avidly, attacking Rosty as an evil Reaganite. As the campaign entered the final weeks, he could see no evidence of any Rostenkowski activity. Maybe Rosty was overconfident, he thought. Maybe he could be beaten.

Late one Saturday night, after a long day of wooing voters, Gutierrez went to bed thinking he might actually win.

The next morning, he stepped outside and saw that every house on his block—every single one except his!—had a big, bright blue-and-orange Rostenkowski sign in the window.

And it wasn't just his street. They were all over the ward. Rosty's precinct captains had spent weeks quietly getting permission to put up the signs and then, in a one-day blitz, they'd covered the ward.

That night, as Gutierrez lay in bed and shut his eyes, all he could see were those damn blue-and-orange signs.

FROM HACK TO HERO

Just as he was about to go on nationwide television to deliver the Democrats' response to President Reagan's speech on tax reform, Dan Rostenkowski leaped out of his chair, yelling, "I'm not going to do it!"

The camera crew gasped. Then Rosty smiled and said he was only kidding. He sat back down and delivered the best speech of his life.

"Working families file their tax forms with the nagging feeling that they're the biggest suckers and chumps in the world," he said. And they were right, he added, because the rich could move their money "from one tax shelter to another." If Ronald Reagan really wanted to reform that system, Rosty said, he'd be glad to help. But it wouldn't be easy, so he urged viewers to send messages of support. "Even if you can't spell Rostenkowski, put down what they used to call my father and grandfather—Rosty. Just address it to Rosty, Washington, D.C. The Post Office will get it to me."

Rostenkowski was dead serious that night in May 1985. He was truly determined to reform the tax code. As he knew better than almost anybody, the code was riddled with loopholes. He'd helped put a lot of them in there. The 1981 tax bill—created in the infamous bidding war between Rosty and Reagan—contained the largest collection of tax breaks for business in history. As a result, 128 large, profitable corporations, such household names as GE, Dow, Boeing and Lockheed, paid no federal taxes for at least one year in the early '80s. In 1983 alone, 30,000 individuals earning more than $250,000 paid less than 5 percent of their income in taxes. Meanwhile, the middle class got stuck with the bill. Rosty saw the pay stubs of his daughters, who were airline flight attendants, and he was shocked at how much was withheld in taxes. It just wasn't fair.

But fairness wasn't the only reason why Rostenkowski was so eager to pass a tax reform bill. He had a personal agenda too. After humiliating defeats on tax bills in 1981 and 1982, he was determined to prove himself a chairman who could get things done. And, as he told reporters over and over, he wanted to show that he was not just a hack pol from Chicago: "A lot of people assume that because I'm from the big city and from quote unquote a machine operation, that all I want to do is play politics. I want to be a patriot too."

He'd picked a tough way to prove himself. Every loophole in the tax law had its own constituency, its own lobby, its own claque of congressmen. But Rosty was obsessed. For the next 18 months, the man once dismissed as lazy worked tirelessly for tax reform. He held months of public hearings. He took his committee on retreats with economists. He held committee meetings on weekends. He twisted arms, he cut deals, he formed coalitions, he cajoled, he reasoned, he begged, he threatened. He used every trick he'd learned in a quarter-century of inside politicking to get a tax reform bill through the Ways and Means Committee. "He played the committee like Yehudi Menuhin plays the Stradivarius," said Henson Moore, a Louisiana Republican on Ways and Means. "It was a virtuoso performance."

Then, when it came time to get the bill through the House, Rosty used another weapon: his power to bestow—or withhold—"transition rules." These are little amendments put into the bill, supposedly to aid a struggling business's transition from the old tax law to the new one. In reality, they are special favors granted to favored constituents of the representatives who support the bill. Rosty played these too, like a maestro.

One Saturday afternoon, recalls Ray

McGrath—who was then a congressman from New York and one of the few Republicans on Ways and Means supporting Rosty's bill—the chairman called him at home. "Look, we have some water projects in New York state that are looking for transition rules," Rosty said. He rattled them off. They were all in Republican districts. "Should I put them in?"

"Sure," McGrath replied.

"I think you should call these guys," Rosty said. If these representatives wanted transition rules, they'd have to vote for the bill.

So McGrath phoned his Republican colleagues. "The chairman just called to tell me he wants to include this in the transition section of the bill," he'd say. "And he wants to know how you're gonna vote on the bill."

The replies were agonized. "Oh, Christ, he's not going to make me do that!"

"Yes, he is," McGrath said.

In the end, there were more than 600 transition rules worth $10 billion in the tax reform bill, which was a new record. It was ironic to find hundreds of tiny loopholes in a bill designed to close loopholes, but Rosty didn't mind. "Danny's perspective," recalls Downey, "was that you had to buy people off to vote for this thing."

Finally, after all the wheeling and dealing, the bill passed the House and then the Senate and was signed by President Reagan in 1986. It was far from perfect—it did nothing to reduce the deficit, for instance—but it was easily the most sweeping tax overhaul since World War II. It closed a multitude of loopholes, ended the ability of profit-making companies to avoid taxes, shifted a large portion of the tax burden from individuals to corporations, reduced the number of tax brackets, cut the top tax rate from 50 percent to 28 percent, and removed more than 4 million low-income workers from the tax rolls.

"The 1986 tax law was the best thing that happened to the tax code structurally," says Robert McIntyre, head of Citizens for Tax Justice, the labor-backed group that had blown the whistle on those 128 corporations that had escaped taxes in the '80s. "Rostenkowski is a hero."

Of course, the bill was not universally popular, particularly the tax cut for upper-income individuals. "Tax cuts were given to the high rollers of this country," says Andy Jacobs, who voted against the bill. "It was another tax shift from the high rollers to the low rollers—to the middle-income people."

Overall, though, reviews were good, and headlines heralded a new Rosty: "Rostenkowski becomes a star on tax reform," said the Chicago Tribune. "Tax Vote Overhauls Rostenkowski's Image," said The Washington Post. A cartoon in the Chicago Sun-Times showed Rosty in a rocking chair patching the loopholes in the flag. The caption read: "Betsy Rosstenkowski."

Rosty raised

$768,000 for the Ways and Means Committee gala. 'Who doesn't want to be on my good side?' the chairman joked.

Rosty loved it. He reveled in his rise from hack to hero. "I wanted to prove to the rest of the House," he said, "that maybe Wilbur Mills was a great chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, but if you take on the Big One and you can accomplish it, you're the chairman."

INCUMBENCY INCARNATE

In 1989, Dan Rostenkowski stood up in public and spoke the unspeakable: "I want to announce that I'm for the pay raise."

Incredible! This was shortly after a presidential commission recommended raising congressional pay from $89,500 to $135,000, and the taxpayers responded with roars of protest. After that, you couldn't find a pol who wanted a raise. They were falling all over each other to say that they didn't deserve it, they didn't want it and they wouldn't accept it. It was a display of hypocrisy that disgusted Rosty.

So he did what he seldom does: He introduced a bill he knew would fail, just to make a point. It advocated allowing members of Congress to select any salary between $89,500 and $135,000.

"I would personally sign in at the highest end of the scale," he said. "If the people of the Eighth Congressional District of Illinois conclude that having the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, in his 30th year of experience . . . , is not worth top dollar to them, then they will be free to make that clear in the next election. In the following Congress, they would have the opportunity to address their grievances to a freshman member with a minor committee assignment and relatively limited means of getting the job done. On the other hand, he or she would come at the bargain rate."

Rosty was riding high in those days. He was the domineering leader of the most powerful committee in Congress. He'd helped to pass a major tax bill, a welfare bill, a trade bill and a bill that saved Social Security from insolvency. A poll of 400 congressional staffers had named him the "most effective legislator in Congress." He'd given more than a million dollars in honoraria to various charities. He'd lectured at Harvard. He was a regular on TV—and not on lowbrow slugfests like "The McLaughlin Group" but on "MacNeil-Lehrer." The guy from the 32nd Ward was a PBS savant!

So Rosty decided to throw a party. It was a celebration of the bicentennial of the Ways and Means Committee, although a lot of people said (behind his back) that it was really a celebration of Dan Rostenkowski.

Rosty had great plans for the Ways and Means gala. This wasn't going to be one of those parties where everybody brings a six-pack and the host sets out some chips and dip. No way. This was going to be a high-tone affair worthy of his august committee.

Such parties don't come cheap. So Dan Rostenkowski did one of the things he does best: He got on the phone and asked big corporations to donate money.

And they ponied up more than $768,000.

"Who doesn't want to be on my good side?" Rosty joked.

"Everybody wants to be on the good side of the chairman of this particular committee," said Larry Armour, spokesman for American Express, one of the corporate donors.

You can buy a lot of party for $768,000, and Rosty did. There was a lunch and a cocktail reception and a formal dinner. There were party favors—gold cuff links and stickpins and hardcover copies of a specially commissioned 526-page illustrated history of the committee. And after dinner, there was a preview of a specially commissioned $500,000 documentary on the committee—a film that showed, among other things, Wilbur Mills gushing about what a "fine fellow" Dan Rostenkowski is.

The party was big fun for Rosty, but the rest of the Bush years were not. It was an era of gridlock and frustration. Rosty was promoting his "Rostenkowski challenge"—a plan to balance the budget by freezing spending and raising income taxes on the wealthy and excise taxes on gas, tobacco and booze—but Bush had promised "no new taxes" and so the plan died.

By 1991, Rosty was confiding to friends that he was seriously considering retirement. He was 63 and getting tired. A lot of his old pals in Congress were gone, replaced by the new breed of blow-dried pols that Rosty loved to grumble about. And Bush seemed like a shoo-in for reelection, which promised more gridlock. The job, he said, just wasn't that much fun anymore.

And there was one other factor: If he got out, he could, under House rules, keep his accumulated campaign contributions. If he stayed in beyond 1993, he could not. The sum in question was more than $1 million.

That factor turned out to be the deciding one, but not the way his critics had predicted. "I think he ran again," says his old friend Tom Lyons, chairman of the Cook County Democratic Party, "because he didn't want people to say he took the million dollars."

He said as much himself: He wanted to go down in history as the guy who reformed the tax law, not as the guy who quit Congress for a million bucks.

So he tossed away a million-dollar bankroll and entered what he knew would be the toughest race of his life. His district, which had been redrawn after the 1990 census, was two-thirds new, and it now included a slice of the lake front, home of white-collar liberals who were not his natural constituency. His opponent in the Democratic primary was a lakefront liberal named Dick Simpson, a political science professor and former alderman, who was bashing Rosty as incumbency incarnate, the honoraria-grabbing king of "back-room deals and payoffs."

So Rosty did something he'd never done before: He hired a political consultant. The consultant, David Axelrod, designed a series of radio ads that ran for eight weeks, highlighting how much federal pork Rosty had brought back to Chicago over the years. Rostenkowsi also did something else he hadn't done in years: He actually campaigned, attending community meetings and shaking hands at shopping centers. It worked. He didn't collect his usual 70 percent of the vote, but he beat Simpson, 57 percent to 43 percent.

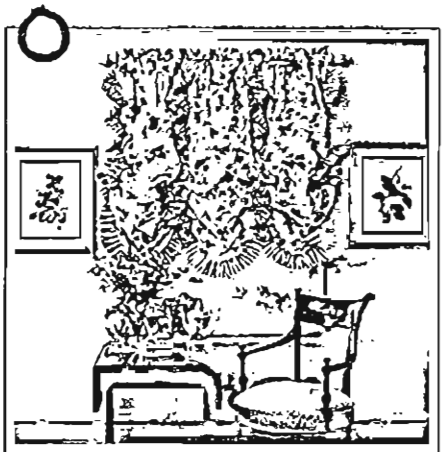
In November, he trounced his Republican opponent, a political neophyte named Elias Zenkich, whose novel campaign strategy was to legally change his middle name to "Non-Incumbent."

Rosty was thrilled at the prospect of working with Bill Clinton, the first Democratic president in 12 years. "I love this guy," he told Downey. "He just wants to get it done." Which is the highest praise in Rosty's vocabulary. The chairman was particularly excited about helping Clinton pass a health reform bill. That would be "a tremendous trophy to hang on the wall of a so-called machine city politician," he said, "the crowning glory of a success story."

But that shot at glory might never come. By the time he was sworn in for his 18th term in Congress last January, Rostenkowski was knee-deep in scandal.

CONGRESSMAN A

The scandal crept up slowly on Dan Rostenkowski.



The first inkling came in the spring of 1992, when a grand jury investigating the troubled House Post Office issued subpoenas for six years of Rostenkowski's office expense records—"including, but not limited to, vouchers for postal stamps"—as well as similar records from two Pennsylvania Democrats, Joe Kolter and Austin Murphy. "I will be happy to cooperate," Rostenkowski said in a written statement. "I am interested in learning what this is all about."

A few weeks later, he learned: Grand jury sources told reporters that James C. Smith, a supervisor at the House Post Office, had testified, under a grant of immunity, that Rostenkowski had skimmed about $20,000 in transactions disguised as official stamp purchases. Rosty termed the charge "totally untrue."

Two months later, Rostenkowski, Kolter and Murphy refused to appear before the grand jury, citing their Fifth Amendment rights against self-incrimination. But the grand jury kept working, subpoenaing more than a dozen Rostenkowski aides in Chicago and Washington—some of them several times—as well as the chairman's daughters, and the records of his reelection committee. Rosty called the probe a "fishing expedition."

In December 1992, the Chicago Sun-Times ran a huge front-page headline: "Rosty's Phantom Office." The story revealed that Rostenkowski's campaign committee paid him $1,250 a month—more than $73,000 since 1986—to rent office space in a building owned by Rosty and his sister. The storefront office, located in a building that abuts Rosty's house, had no phone and no sign, and appeared to be "little more than a mail drop." Rosty's sister, Gladys, who lives above the office, told the Sun-Times that it had been vacant for years but Rosty said it was a "normal office" used to store campaign materials. Asked who staffed the office, he replied: "I am the staff."

A month later, the Sun-Times revealed that Rostenkowski had used more than $68,000 in taxpayers' money to lease three cars that later became his personal property. After that, the grand jury subpoenaed the congressman's car records.

Pressure was intensifying. Common Cause asked the House ethics committee to investigate Rostenkowski. A New York Times editorial seconded that notion and urged House Democrats to "call on Mr. Rostenkowski to step aside as chairman." Worse, a Chicago Tribune editorial hit Rosty right in his pride: "The boss of all bosses operates like a shifty-eyed precinct captain on the make . . . These are activities one would expect of a small-time ward heeler, not a figure of such influence and stature."

Rosty took these blows and soldiered on, helping to shepherd Bill Clinton's deficit reduction package through a reluctant House.

Then, in July, he was hit with worse news: Robert Rota, former House postmaster, pleaded guilty to two counts of embezzlement and one count of conspiracy in connection with an alleged scheme to help two House members convert congressional expense money into cash. The members were identified in legal documents only as "Congressman A" and "Congressman B," but they were easily identifiable as Rostenkowski and Kolter, respectively. Rota—who had twice previously testified that no such scheme existed—now claimed that between 1985 and 1991, he had given Rosty $21,300 in cash in return for expense vouchers for postage stamps.

According to the indictment, Rota explained the scheme to the newly promoted Smith "on or about" July 26, 1989—which was two days after Rosty's gala Ways and Means party: "Congressman A took care of them, so they had to take care of Congressman A in return." It almost sounded like Paddy Bauler.

A couple of days after Rota's plea, Smith talked to the Sun-Times about Rosty: "He is a larger than life figure, like some Shakespearean figure, a noble man with a tragic flaw. It's not like this is an evil man we're dealing with here. He gives thousands of dollars to charities. He's a good congressman. He just has some human frailties."

The next day Rosty called a press conference in the Ways and Means Committee room, the scene of so many of his triumphs, and read a brief statement: "I want to make it absolutely clear that I have committed no crime and have engaged in no illegal or unethical conduct." He seemed shaky and he sounded winded. He took no questions, citing his attorneys' advice.

Those attorneys were costing him a lot of money—more than $350,000 for his own legal bills and those of his subpoenaed staffers. For a year, he paid those bills out of his campaign coffers. Then, in late August, he set up a legal defense fund and began soliciting contributions from sympathetic individuals, corporations and unions. It was yet another way, critics chided, for special interests to do a favor for the chairman.

and Downey sat in the car awhile. Then, out of the blue, Rosty said: 'Jesus, Tom, this is awful. It's killing me.'

For the next two months, as Rosty waited to see if he'd be indicted, his many friends defended his integrity, worried about him, took him out to dinner, tried to cheer him up. "He talks about his stomach being hamburger," says Downey. "It's gotten him down. How could it not? Thirty-five years in Congress and his legacy will only be that he chiseled on some stamps?"

"The last time I saw him," says Ray McGrath, "I looked him in the eye and said, 'How are you doing?' and he said, 'How the [expletive] you think I'm doing?' "

Rostenkowski doesn't talk much about his feelings, but every once in a while they slip out. One night, after they watched the movie "In the Line of Fire," Downey drove the chairman back to that little apartment he stays in when he's in Washington. They sat in the car awhile, talking about how the city had changed, about buildings that had come and gone during their years here. Then, out of the blue, Rosty said: "Jesus, Tom, this is awful. It's killing me."

'WHAT ARE THEY GOING TO SAY ABOUT DANNY ROSTENKOWSKI?'

"I've been talking to your friends and your adversaries—"

"Tell me what my adversaries are saying about me," Rostenkowski interrupted. "They say you're corrupt, you're out of touch with your district, you won't win again."

"I'm out of touch with my district? That [ticks] me off," he said in his famously gruff voice. "Because I'm trying to lead, and I'm not trying to cater to the special interests, because I try to put packages together that ultimately will help people over the long haul, they think I'm out of touch. That really makes me mad."

He was sitting in one of his offices in the Capitol, a tiny alcove with room for just a blue divan and a couple of chairs. He wore a red-and-white striped shirt, a blue tie, gray slacks and brown loafers. A yellow pencil stuck out of his right shoe, which rested on his left knee. He was perched on a white chair that was set into a recessed window so that the royal blue curtains hung at his side, almost as if he were on a throne. He'd agreed to talk—for just half an hour or so—with a reporter who'd been interviewing his friends and adversaries for weeks. But there was one ground rule: no questions about the stamps scandal. And now, before a single question was asked, he'd launched into a monologue on his political philosophy.

"If there's an emphasis, it's getting as much done as possible," he said. "I've always felt that way. I'll do 60 percent and let the other 40 percent go for another day. But I'll get something done. I don't like to sacrifice the possible in pursuit of the perfect."

He crossed his legs, took the pencil from his shoe, tapped it on his lips, used it to prod his huge, creased face. Soon he was off on a spirited defense of pork-barreling. "I'm not ashamed of doing that," he said. "If somebody on Public Works wants to get money for paving a highway in Texas, why shouldn't I try to get money for paving a highway in the state of Illinois?"

Then he launched into colorful tales of Dick Daley and Sam Rayburn and Lyndon Johnson. When Rosty describes Johnson, he sounds like other people describing Rostenkowski: "He wasn't the most personable guy or the most likable guy, but boy, he knew how to move this building. It was: 'Lyndon's done a few things for you, now it's your turn to do a few things for Lyndon.' I enjoyed Lyndon Johnson."

"What about Wilbur Mills? What did you learn from him?"

"I learned that you gotta be patient. I learned that—well, times are so different now. When Wilbur Mills wrote a health bill, it took him four years. I gotta do it in three weeks. Everything is pushed against a crisis these days."

A bell rang indicating a vote in the House and Rosty's aide said, "Ten minutes."

"I've been chairman of this committee for—what?—13 years. Wilbur Mills was chair for about 16 or 18 years. I'll put my record of accomplishment, of legislative gain, against his record and any other chairman's record."

"What is your biggest accomplishment?"

"Oh, the '86 tax reform act, no question about it," he said. He mentioned other bills—welfare, trade, Social Security—but kept returning to the tax bill. "Tax reform was kind of a throwaway until I got serious about it. And I'll tell you the truth, if I'd have known how complicated, and how much of my life I was going to spend on it, I don't think I would have done it."

"Why did you do it?"

"Because that was going to establish if I was chairman of the committee or not," he said, his voice booming. "Don't forget, my first year and a half with Ronald Reagan was devastating."

Another bell rang and the aide said, "Five minutes."

"I really didn't think I was going to stay around here as long as I did," he said. "I figured I'd put in maybe five or seven or eight years as chairman of the Ways and Means Committee and get out. Go into business."

"Why didn't you?"

"I don't know." He voice softened almost to a whisper. "I made a big mistake."

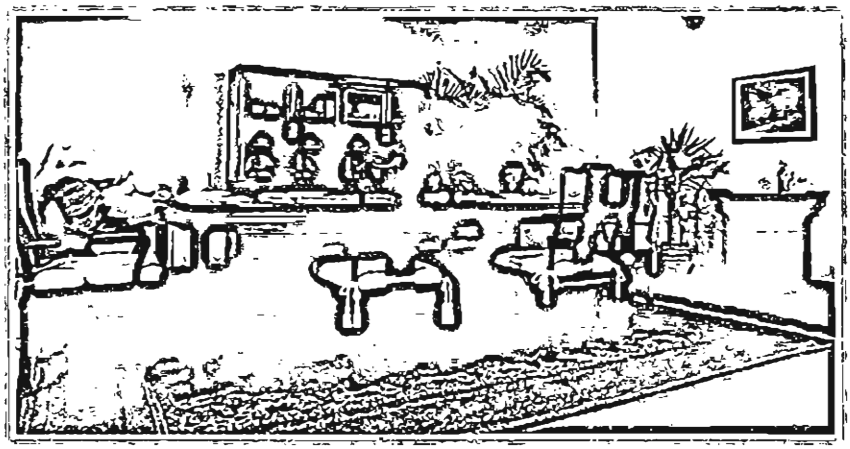
"Why was it a mistake?"

"Well, I don't know." He laughed. "I got all kinds of problems now."

"With those problems hanging over your head, is it less fun?"

"Yeah, it's less fun. It's something I gotta be concerned with."

He talked about how he watches people recognize him in public places and then quickly avert their eyes. He wonders if they're thinking about the stamps scandal. "You just become more aware of yourself when you've got this cloud. And you interpret things differently . . .



"I don't worry about health care as the last thing I do when I go to bed these days," he said. "I don't worry about NAFTA as the last thing I do when I go to bed. I think of, first of all, my image in the future: What are they going to say about Danny Rostenkowski? . . . It preys on me, but the fact of the matter is: I gotta get some things done."

Another bell rang and the aide said, "One minute."

"I gotta get some things done and I'm just tunnel vision on trying to leave a good record."

Then he stood up, shook hands and lumbered off to the House chamber to vote. ■

was sent around to meet the various people who were working on the project. These were people I would get to know pretty well. I learned that the transplant research was supported by many groups and individuals at Yale.

There were psychiatric tests and interviews and physical histories and exams. The old neuro tests, I called them. I had done them a thousand times before—finger to nose, finger to nose. My memory was tested, as were my reasoning powers, my physical strength, hand-eye coordination (how I hated that stupid computer with that nasty little mouse I never did get to work for me). They tested my verbal ability and my emotional stability. My favorite part was being asked if I ever heard voices in my head or had hallucinations—I told the doctor no, unless you count those telling me to lead the armies of France into battle. Luckily for me, the psychiatrist had a sense of humor.

I thoroughly enjoyed talking about myself, but found myself dreading the biggest test of all—at least to my way of thinking—the drug holiday. While it sounds like a good time on a tropical island somewhere, it is really a horrible experience. It requires one to stop taking any drugs at all for a specific length of time. In my case that was 48 hours without Sinemet, a drug that contains L-dopa. This allows the doctors to see how far the disease has progressed. It is no fun. In the past, at Walter Reed, NIH and elsewhere, I had tried to hold out for the entire time required, but was unable to do so despite my best efforts. The combination of constant shaking, as though you are in an aerobics class from hell, and the pain from sore and cramping muscles was always too much for me.

For me, the drug holiday meant very severe tremors in my legs and arms, followed by muscle rigidity. Then I would be like stone, unable to move except very, very slowly.

Periodically, the staff would videotape my progress during the drug holiday. To protect my privacy, I was dressed in surgical scrubs and my face was not shown.

In spite of much pain and exhaustion, I lasted the whole time. I was amazed! Everyone was amazed! The only explanation I have is that Ed was allowed to be with me the whole time. He knows me so well that he can offer the right words (and funny comments) that I need. He has always been there for me.

At the conclusion of the drug holiday, I met Dennis Spencer, who headed the neurosurgical team. I liked him immediately. I told him the next drug holiday I took would be in the Cayman Islands. He asked if I wanted my personal neurosurgeon to come along.

All the testing was over. I was ready. All I needed now was the operation.

THE SURGERY REQUIRED COORDINATING the schedules of all the participants. With all the departments involved and the strict adherence to a full set of safeguards regarding the patient and the acquisition of the fetal material, scheduling was a complex task. I had been placed in the group that was to undergo surgery immediately. The other group, the control group, would also receive the implants, but after a further year's worth of data gathering. Placement into one or the other group was purely random, but I was happy that I wouldn't have to wait another year.

For many years I have felt like a disease with a woman attached. Now I feel like a woman with a disease.

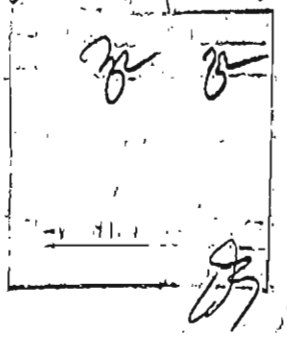
The most fearsome part of the operation (as far as I was concerned) was the head shaving. My whole head was to be shaved, and I was not looking forward to it. I know that it is "in" in some circles to shave your head these days, but a 48-year-old woman? I was convinced I would either look like Elmer Fudd or a Nazi collaborator. Though shopping excursions were tiring, my friend Sue and I went hunting for scarves to cover my head, and Ed and I bought a wig that was so like my own hair that most people didn't even notice. It looked better than the results I usually got from trying to make my hair do what I wanted.

Even though I was pretty well convinced that the operation would not change my life (at least not right away) and tried not to think about its success or failure (actually, I didn't think about it failing—I thought it would work, the only question was how much and how soon), I was more than ready to get on with it.

The date was set and then changed to a later date because of schedule conflicts. Disappointed at first, I was ready when the call came with my firm date—November 1, 1991.

Once again we drove north to New Haven, knowing that on our return trip home things would be changed for Ed and me.

I CHECKED INTO THE HOSPITAL AND went through further tests to be sure that everything was ready and in good shape to get on with the transplant. Anita Farhi had told us earlier that we could bring our own music to play during the surgery, and Ed had put together two tapes containing some of my favorites, a mixture of classical, Paul Simon and the '60s.



I remember very little about the operation. I do remember lying on the gurney outside the operating room waiting for the procedure to start. Allen Gerber, a member of the neurological team, came out and tried to engage in small talk so I wouldn't be nervous. It worked to some extent. I don't think I was nervous as much as excited. Anyway, I am always happy to talk; it's actually one of my favorite things to do.

Knowing how worried I was about having my head shaved, Dr. Spencer shaved my head himself. There was an awkward minute when the shears pulled at my hair, making me flinch. Apparently when I had washed my hair the day before, I had not gotten all the EKG glop out of my hair. After rinsing out the shear-resistant glop, he finished the job. Then, under mild sedation, I was moving in and out of consciousness, aware of having my head attached to a frame and collar to hold me in place, hearing Dr. Spencer ask me questions about how I was feeling and how I was doing. The Mamas and the Papas were singing in the background about California dreaming and someone was holding my hand. I never felt alone or even concerned, while Anita, my hand holder, was talking to me.

The operation lasted six hours. When I was aware that it was over, and Dr. Spencer was asking how I felt and telling me how well it had gone, I was profoundly glad and relieved and hopeful for the future. But more than anything—and this is pretty embarrassing—I needed to empty my bladder of the fluids that had been dripping into my veins all day. Exit Dr. Spencer and crew and enter someone with a bedpan. When that was accomplished they came back in and stood around me, and I felt great. They asked me if there was anything I wanted, and I told them the only thing I really wanted was a hug from Ed. They asked if it had to be from Ed; they would be happy to give

Rostenkowski Staff Payroll Is Scrutinized

Friends Got Salaries For Little or No Work, Chicago Paper Says

From News Services

CHICAGO, Dec. 19—Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) paid numerous Chicago friends and neighbors federal salaries even though many did little or no work for the congressman, according to a report published today in a Chicago newspaper.

In its story, the Chicago Sun-Times named several people, connected either politically or personally to the longtime chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, who were paid tens of thousands of dollars. The report said the payroll included double-dipping city workers and employees who did not show up for work on Rostenkowski's staff.

The newspaper said 40 current and former Rostenkowski employees it contacted over several months confirmed they had been subpoenaed by a Washington grand jury looking into Rostenkowski's finances.

Rostenkowski also has been investigated about his dealings with the House Post Office amid allegations the 18-term congressman received up to $21,300 in cash by exchanging free stamps. Questions also have arisen about leases on automobiles and campaign offices that Rostenkowski owned but used federal money to rent.

Rostenkowski repeatedly has denied any wrongdoing, and no charges have been brought against him.

[Rostenkowski's attorney, Robert Bennett, told The Washington Post Sunday that "because of the current status of the (federal grand jury) inquiry, it would not be appropriate to respond to press allegations. Should it become necessary, we will submit appropriate responses to the United States Attorney's Office."]

James Nedza, the son of a former Illinois state representative, received $48,000 between 1983 and 1986 as a part-time employee, the newspaper said. Other Rostenkowski employees interviewed by the Sun-Times said they had never heard of Nedza or seen him working.

Nedza's lawyer, Richard Troy, declined to comment to the Sun-Times.

Nedza put two of Rostenkowski's daughters in succession on the state payroll, according to public contracts.

The Chicago Sun-Times article also said:

- Celeste Gabinski, the wife of Chicago Alderman Terry M. Gabinski, remained on Rostenkowski's payroll for five years after she quit working in his Chicago district office in 1987. She was paid $79,000 over that period and went off the payroll in May 1992, when the probe into Rostenkowski's finances became public.
- A schoolteacher whose husband worked for Alderman Gabinski and later got a job as a city carpenter was paid up to $4,000 a month as a temporary worker.
- Instead of paying rent on a satellite office, Rostenkowski put the storefront's co-owner on his payroll.
- An elderly next-door neighbor of Rostenkowski was listed on his payroll, but she denied having done any work for him since babysitting his children, the youngest of whom is 33. Sophie Palasz, 77, appeared four times on Rostenkowski's payroll between 1985 and 1989.
- Many full-time Chicago city workers simultaneously have been Rostenkowski employees.
- From 1979 to 1990, Rostenkowski averaged one-third more employees per year than any other member of the Illinois delegation, even though they all had the same amount to spend for staff.

The newspaper quoted the former payroll counselor for the House of Representatives, H. Bruce Avner, as saying Rostenkowski was unlike fellow representatives in that he handled his own office payroll.

He would spend the entire amount budgeted for congressional payrolls—which this year was $557,400—and would shift temporary employees on and off his staff roster.

House members are allowed up to 18 full-time and four part-time staff members on their payroll at any time.

Rostenkowski Hiring Probed

Revolving-Door Pattern Questioned

U.S. Rep. Dan Rostenkowski controlled a payroll that included employees who did not show up for work at his office, double-dipping city workers, and tenants of his family-owned buildings, a Chicago Sun-Times investigation has found.

Rostenkowski's hiring practices for his congressional payroll also are being scrutinized with increased interest by a federal grand jury in Washington, D.C., former Rostenkowski employees have told the Sun-Times.

The Sun-Times previously has reported Rostenkowski used taxpayer money to acquire valuable quit her job in D.C. to stay home and start a family.

D.A. former employees in the office told the Sun-Times she's never met a man who collected $38,000 over four years for allegedly working in the same small office while she worked there.

Another woman listed on the congressman's payroll—an elderly, part-time neighbor of Rostenkowski's—told the paper she hadn't done any work at all for the $2,000 she received for the of three cars and used campaign funds to pay himself for a fifth used while.

Both matters since have come under investigation by the grand jury, which started probing Rostenkowski's use of his congressional [illegible] after the Sun-Times first reported [illegible] as the House [illegible] Post Office

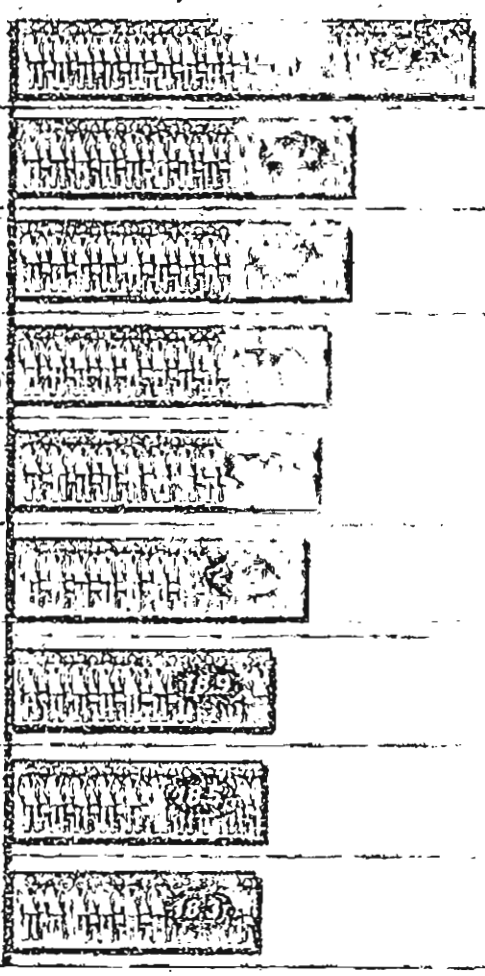
Then the name of the latest Sun-Times investigation of Rostenkowski's payroll has revealed: The wife of Rostenkowski's press aide, Jill Tarry M. Gabrielli (D-Ill.), listed as the congressman's payroll for five years and received roughly $75,000 in pay

...people through the years by a large number of temporary employees, many of whom also were full-time city workers or tenants in his family's buildings.

Rostenkowski put a woman on the payroll to cover the rent on a storefront he was leasing for use as a satellite office, despite regulations requiring that payroll funds be used only for employees.

Rostenkowski's lawyer, Robert Bennett, declined to answer questions or comment on the Sun-Times' findings.

The Sun-Times contacted 40 current and former Rostenkowski employees, and most refused to answer questions except to confirm they have been subpoenaed by the grand jury. Many are being represented by Washington lawyer James Cole, who is paid by the Rostenkowski campaign committee. Some said they had been instructed not to talk to the press, and they referred questions to Cole, who has not returned telephone calls from the Sun-Times.



As recently as two weeks ago, Cole was in Chicago preparing Rostenkowski workers for interviews being conducted here by federal prosecutors.

Investigators appear to be paying particular attention to the many temporary employees who have appeared on Rostenkowski's payroll for his Chicago office—some for as little as a month or two.

From 1978 to 1988, Rostenkowski averaged a third more employees per year than any other member of the Illinois delegation who served continuously that time, even though he had the same amount to spend on staff.

mployees reappoll at irregular intervals over many years. Although they generally received just a few thousand dollars at a time, some were paid significant amounts for their short times on the payroll.

"I think they were looking more or less at people with sporadic employment," said Eleanor Georgalas, an immigration specialist in Rostenkowski's Chicago office from 1981 through 1987, in reference to her interview by FBI agents. "They're looking for people who were on a month, off a month."

James Nedza, son of former state Sen. Edward Nedza, is one of the many employees who went on and off the congressman's payroll. Nedza did four-month stints on Rostenkowski's payroll in 1983, 1984, 1985 and 1986, collecting $12,000 each time, according to House records.

Although that rate of pay made Nedza the highest-paid employee on the congressman's staff during some pay periods, Georgalas said she never had heard of him before she was questioned by the Sun-Times.

Nedza's lawyer, Richard Troy, declined comment. Nedza told the Sun-Times last summer that he had worked as a "legislative aide" in the congressman's office, performing clerical duties such as answering the telephone.

During the same four-year period that his son was paid by the congressman, the elder Nedza put two of Rostenkowski's daughters in succession on the state payroll, public contracts show. They were paid $12,000 a year, too.

Georgalas also recalled that Celeste Gabinski, then newly married to the alderman, quit working in Rostenkowski's office about the same time she did in October, 1987—perhaps a little sooner.

Records show that was nearly five years before Mrs. Gabinski left the payroll in May, 1992—the same month it was first revealed publicly that a federal grand jury was looking into Rostenkowski's affairs.

Mrs. Gabinski's absence from the office was confirmed by Eva Wierzynska, who replaced Georgalas as Rostenkowski's immigration specialist in Chicago, and by others who asked not to be identified.

"I never saw her working," said Wierzynska, who said she was once told that Mrs. Gabinski did some bookkeeping work from home.

Mrs. Gabinski did receive a pay reduction beginning in 1988, records show. After collecting $28,804 in 1986 and $29,939 in 1987, she slipped to $20,000 in 1988, $12,000 as a part-time employee in 1989, $19,968 in 1990, $17,649 for five months in 1991 and $11,666 for four months in 1992.

After the Gabinskis were married in February, 1987, she obtained an insurance broker's license and set up an insurance broke Neither of the Gabinskis returned phone calls.

Before she married the alderman, Mrs. Gabinski worked as her prospective husband's secretary, numerous co-workers said.

Her salary, however, was coming from Rostenkowsk.. House records show.

Records also show that when Mrs. Gabinski, whose maiden name was Kropidlowski, went on the federal payroll full time in January, 1981, one of Rostenkowski's daughters went on the City Council payroll.

City personnel records don't show which alderman put the daughter on the payroll. But records do show that a City Council committee chaired by Gabinski was paying one of Rostenkowski's sisters during part of the period Celeste Kropidlowski was employed by the congressman.

Stephanie Chomko Muir, who coworkers say replaced Mrs. Gabinski as the alderman's secretary, also received her $31,000 salary from the congressman. House records indicate. During her time on the federal payroll Muir also was paid less than $2,000 a year as a part-time City Council employee, according to city work records subpoenaed by the grand jury. Muir, 30, who is currently on a leave of absence from Rostenkowski's office, declined comment.

Her son, Daniel, a county employee who lives downstairs from her in the same building, said his mother's memory is failing, but he said he, too, knows of no work she performed for the congressman and doesn't believe she received any pay.

Mrs. Palasz, who was 72 when she last appeared on the payroll for $3,012 for one month's work in 1989, said she never stuffed envelopes or any other similar task for which politicians say they occasionally hire extra help.

"I didn't do no cards, envelopes," she said. "If he asked me, I would tell him to do it himself."

Another tenant who was on Rostenkowski's payroll was Joanna Hojnowski, who collected amounts ranging from $795 to $7,125 per year between 1971 and 1985 while living in an apartment above the Damen Avenue congressional office.

Mrs. Hojnowski could not be reached for comment, but her husband, Leo, told the Sun-Times last summer that she was a seamstress and may have done some sewing work for the congressman and alderman. Contacted again recently, however, Mr. Hojnowski, a retired city worker and Democratic precinct captain, said his wife had earned the money by cleaning up the congressional office.

When the Hojnowskis moved out [in] 1986, Lucille and Emanuel Dudzinski moved into their apartment and onto Rostenkowski's payroll. Mrs. Dudzinski was paid $30,199 through July, 1992.

She could not be reached for comment, but her husband, a city Water Department employee and a precinct captain, declined to discuss what work his wife did for the [con]gressman.

[Mrs.] Russo also held a job as a city Water Department employee, even during the stretches of up to five months that he was carried on the congressman's payroll at a salary of up to $5,107 per month. The Russos also would not answer questions about their work for the congressman.

[Mrs.] Russo was paid $11,136 in [1975] and 1976, before her husband [took] her spot. He collected $81,898 [from] 1977 to 1987.

Hou[se] regulations require that congr[essmen] pay their employees only [for] the time period they are carried [on the] payroll, not for past or future services.

The moonlighting city payrollers include Leo Moskal, a policeman, and Leonard Pawlowski, a top official in the forestry division.

Moskal received $8,000 for two months' work in 1988 and another $8,000 for two months in 1990—more than his policeman's salary. He could not be reached for comment.

Pawlowski has been paid up to $3,000 by Rostenkowski for a month's work. His wife, Carol, also has shown up on the congressman's payroll. They referred questions to their lawyer, Cole.

SATELLITE OFFICE

Barbara Koziol said the $7,500 annual salary she received from 1978 to 1985 was mainly to cover rent for a storefront she and her husband, Marion, owned at 5051 W. Fullerton, where Rostenkowski maintained a satellite office. The storefront was opened initially as a campaign office and often was used for political purposes, she said.

The Koziols said they never had questioned the propriety of Rostenkowski paying his rent by putting Mrs. Koziol on the payroll until they were asked about it by the Sun-Times and FBI agents.

"There are a lot of things that we're hearing about that we never heard of before," Marion Koziol said.

CHICAGO POLITICS

Patricia Kardasz held a job as a Catholic schoolteacher while she was bouncing on and off Rostenkowski's payroll at salaries of up to $4,000 a month until early 1992. She was on the payroll often during the school year.

Mrs. Kardasz said she did typing and filing for the congressman, some of it from her home. Wierzynska, the former immigration specialist whose tenure in the office overlapped four years that Kardasz was on the payroll, said Kardasz did not work from the Damen office during the four y[ears] was on the congressman's

This building at 2146-50 W. Damen, owned by relatives of Dan Rostenkowski, for many years housed his congressional office, the 32nd Ward Democratic Organization and Ald. Terry Gabinski's office.

Mrs. Kardasz said she was questioned closely during an appearance before the grand jury a year ago about the overlapping deposits and titles between Gabinski and Aldermanic Workers in the Damen Avenue ward office shared by Rostenkowski and Gabinski.

"I told the grand jury, 'You just don't know how Chicago politics work,'" Mrs. Kardasz said.

A legislator's latest trouble isn't his alone

New allegations against Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, a key player in the House, could be one more obstacle for the President and his 1994 agenda.

By Aaron Epstein
INQUIRER WASHINGTON BUREAU

WASHINGTON — New allegations that Rep. Dan Rostenkowski hired nonworking employees at taxpayers' expense have deepened the powerful Chicago Democrat's legal troubles — and rekindled anxiety at the White House and in Congress.

For President Clinton, the disclosures are especially untimely. His main priorities for 1994 — health-care reform, welfare reform and approval of the trade agreement known as GATT — must go through Rostenkowski's Ways and Means Committee.

Rostenkowski, a power broker in Congress and a key figure in Clinton's drive for economic and health-care reforms, has been under federal criminal investigation for 19 months. He has denied earlier allegations and declined to comment on the new ones.

The complex investigation could last well into the new year. Prosecutors have been explaining the details to a second grand jury because the tenure of the first one expired at the end of October.

If the burly, 65-year-old Rostenkowski is indicted, he would be required to step down as committee chairman. His likely successor would be Florida Democrat Sam M. Gibbons, 73.

"That would be very difficult - because President Clinton relies on him [Rostenkowski] very strongly," said Rep. Thomas M. Foglietta (D., Pa.). "Sam's a damn good guy, but it would take him a long time to develop Rosty's leadership and relationship with members of the House. Rosty does a fantastic job."

A panel shake-up would hurt, one Democrat said. "Rosty does a fantastic job."

Health economist Lynn Etheredge, who has strong ties to the White House, said Rostenkowski was important to passage of Clinton's health-care legislation but not indispensable. He said House Majority Leader Richard A. Gephardt of Missouri would play a more critical role in brokering a compromise among Democrats.

At the heart of the most serious new allegations about Rostenkowski is old-fashioned political patronage.

For generations, in Chicago and many large Eastern cities, officeholders often placed the names of friends, relatives, political allies, and friends and relatives of political allies on public payrolls.

When the apparent recipients of such benefits do little or no work, as sometimes happens, they are called ghost employees. Employing ghost workers violates federal law.

Rostenkowski's congressional payroll showed payments of tens of thousands of dollars to people who did not show up for work, according to a detailed report Sunday in the Chicago Sun-Times. Many of them have been subpoenaed to testify before the grand jury.

The paper reported that:

- Payments to the wife of Chicago Alderman Terry Gabinski continued for five years after she quit working in Rostenkowski's Chicago office in 1987 to stay home and start a family. She was paid $79,000 over five years and went off the payroll when the federal investigation of Rostenkowski surfaced last year.
- Sophie Palasz, 77, received more than $6,000 between 1985 and 1989 but could not recall doing any work for the congressman since baby-sitting his daughters. The youngest of Rostenkowski's daughters is 33.
- The Rostenkowski payroll also funneled money to Chicago city workers and tenants of buildings owned by the congressman's family. Instead of paying rent for a political office, Rostenkowski put the owner of the building on his payroll at a $7,500 annual salary.

Rostenkowski aides who have been questioned by the FBI said the investigators were particularly interested in a succession of employees who went on and off the congressman's office payroll.

By using temporary workers in his Chicago office, Rostenkowski was able to place additional people on his congressional payroll without exceeding House payroll limits.

Rostenkowski hired one-third more workers than anyone else in the Illinois congressional delegation from 1979 to 1990, even though all had the same amount of money to spend for their staffs, the Sun-Times reported.

The chairman handled his own payroll, dealing directly with H. Bruce Avnet, a former House payroll counselor assigned exclusively to Rostenkowski.

"He didn't want anybody to know what he was doing," said Avnet, who was fired recently for improperly altering his own payroll records.

The new disclosures appear related to the discovery in September that 210 Rostenkowski payroll files had vanished. The discovery was made after the grand jury subpoenaed the records. The files contained signed authorizations for the hiring of employees and changes in their salaries, House officials said.

The House ethics committee, which has suspended its probe of Rostenkowski's conduct until the criminal inquiry ends, has been asked by another committee to look into the disappearance of the records.

Based on earlier grand jury testimony, investigators suspect that Rostenkowski illegally converted $23,000 of congressional and campaign money into cash by purchasing stamps at the House post office.

Other lines of inquiry focus on alleged payments of more than $73,000 in campaign money to Rostenkowski and his sisters for a little-used office, improper leasing of cars with House office money and use of the congressional free-mail privilege to ship golf clubs and other personal items.

Grand jury subpoenas records relating to Rostenkowski's travels

By Paul M. Rodriguez
THE WASHINGTON TIMES

The federal grand jury probing Rep. Dan Rostenkowski has subpoenaed all House records relating to the Illinois Democrat's extensive travels in the United States and overseas, according to court documents.

The latest subpoena also seeks all documents regarding the assignment and rotation of payroll and financial management counselors for all House members from Jan. 1, 1978, through Wednesday.

House officials are required to personally appear with the documents before the grand jury on Jan. 18, according to the subpoena, which was issued on Wednesday.

The subpoena for Mr. Rostenkowski's travel records covers the period Jan. 1, 1985, to Jan. 5, and includes, but is not limited to, airline tickets, travel itineraries, taxi receipts and related expenses.

The probe of Mr. Rostenkowski, the powerful chairman of the tax-writing House Ways and Means Committee, has entered its third calendar year.

In November, a federal grand jury issued subpoenas to the House for Mr. Rostenkowski's financial records dating back to 1957.

Current and former federal law enforcement and congressional sources said that the investigation is expected to continue at least several more weeks before prosecutors decide whether to seek an indictment of the Chicago-based congressman.

Mr. Rostenkowski has denied any wrongdoing and has invoked his Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination to avoid testifying before the grand jury.

Federal prosecutors are seeking Mr. Rostenkowski's travel records to determine if he billed the House for unofficial trips or charged taxpayers for trips that should have been paid either with personal or campaign funds.

The request for extensive records on payroll and financial management counselors stems from a discovery last year of missing payroll records related to Mr. Rostenkowski's staff and his use of the same payroll counselor for over 10 years.

House rules require payroll counselors, who work in the House Finance Office, to be rotated at least every two years.

Prosecutors are trying to determine why that occurred and if other members sought similar treatment.

The long-running probe originally centered on illegal drug sales and embezzlement at the House post office by clerks and managers. It quickly expanded to include allegations that congressional staff and House members were also improperly cashing checks at the facility and illegally trading stamps for cash.

Rep. Dan Rostenkowski has denied wrongdoing in the lengthy probe.

Rostenkowski Charges Reportedly Outlined

By Pierre Thomas
and Ruth Marcus
Washington Post Staff Writers

U.S. Attorney Eric H. Holder Jr. has sent to the Justice Department an outline of proposed charges against House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) in the House Post Office investigation, placing at risk the political career of one of the most influential members of Congress, sources said last night.

Holder sent the recommendations to the Justice Department for review earlier this week and may seek a grand jury indictment of Rostenkowski as early as the end of this month, the sources said.

Holder's action is a significant development in the two-year-old case. "Theoretically, the Justice Department has the final decision on this case, but given the political sensitivity, the U.S. attorney's decision would probably stand," one law enforcement source said yesterday.

Rostenkowski, who previously has denied wrongdoing, said last night he had no knowledge of the latest development. "I didn't have any idea," Rostenkowski he said. "They [prosecutors] haven't told me. . . . I don't know anything about any charges."

Rostenkowski's attorney, Robert Bennett, did not return telephone messages seeking comment. The Justice Department and Holder's office declined to comment on the case.

Federal Prosecutor Is Said to Outline Criminal Case Against Rostenkowski

ROSTENKOWSKI, From A1

If Rostenkowski were indicted, House rules would require that he step down from his chairmanship. Next in line is Rep. Sam Gibbons (D-Fla.), an advocate of a single-payer approach to health care rather than the Clinton administration approach.

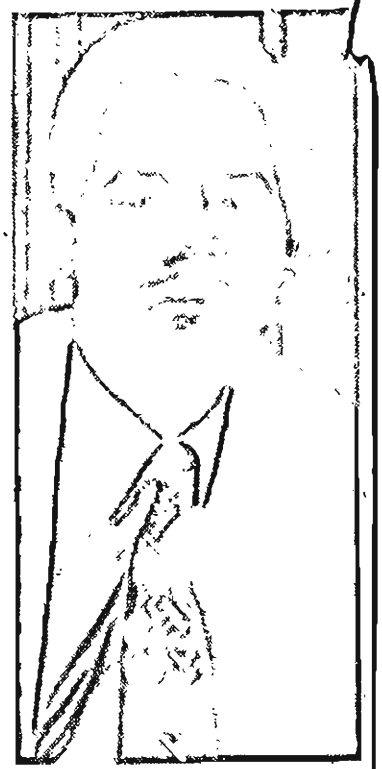
Sources last night declined to characterize the proposed charges against Rostenkowski but said that prosecutors in Holder's office had recommended seeking indictment and described the array of charges as a "kitchen sink" approach.

The investigation of Rostenkowski started under Holder's Republican predecessor, Jay B. Stephens, and focused initially on financial irregularities by employees of the House Post Office. But the probe expanded to include allegations that Rostenkowski, completing his 36th year in Congrees, misused his official accounts for postage, personnel, office supplies, leased cars and office space in his Chicago district.

The probe has widened a number of times, including last December when, according to news reports, the grand jury began looking into whether some of Rostenkowski's Chicago office workers were paid for work they did not perform. Former House postmaster Robert V. Rota has pleaded guilty to misdemeanors and stated in court papers that he made $21,000 available to Rostenkowski under the guise of official postage purchases.

Holder, who was appointed by President Clinton, inherited an investigation that immediately placed him in the awkward position of having to decide the future of a key Clinton ally. He is a former D.C. Superior Court judge appointed by President Ronald Reagan and was a prosecutor in the Justice Department's Public Integrity Section.

The case will be reviewed by career attorneys from the Public Integrity Section and senior lawyers in the department's Criminal Division. One law enforcement source said the review could be a lengthy process and that the matter might not be resolved by month's end.



In addition to Rostenkowski, Bennett also represents Clinton against allegations, not yet made in court, that he made sexual advances to a state employee while governor of Arkansas.

Bennett's dual role could pose complications for the Rostenkowski case, some lawyers suggested. For example, in possible plea negotiations, Holder would be dealing not only with Rostenkowski's lawyer but with the lawyer for the president who appointed him. Holder said in an interview several weeks ago that politics will play no role in his handling of the case.

The fate of Rostenkowski, a Democrat, is tied to a number critical issues that are central to the Democratic Clinton administration: health care, welfare, trade, taxes and other financial matters. All those concerns fall under the responsibility of Rostenkowski's Ways and Means Committee. Clinton recently appeared with the embattled congressman in the midst of a hotly contested primary, despite the fact that prosecution was a strong possibility.

Clinton defended his Chicago trip, saying the appearance was not campaigning. At the same time, however, he made quite clear how valuable Rostenkowski was, noting, "I am going there . . .to talk about issues that directly relate to this administration's work that he is a critical part of—health care and crime."

Attorneys for Rostenkowski Negotiating With Justice Dept.

By Pierre Thomas and Kenneth J. Cooper
Washington Post Staff Writers

Attorneys for Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) are in the preliminary stages of negotiating with Justice Department officials who want to indict the House Ways and Means Committee chairman, sources familiar with the case said last night.

Discussions between Justice Department officials and Rostenkowski's lawyers have focused on several employees of his Chicago district office who allegedly did no official work and his purchases of personal gift items through his expense account at the House Stationery Store, which he has since reimbursed $82,000, the sources said. They indicated that Justice Department lawyers think they can make a case against Rostenkowski of conspiracy to defraud the government.

Rostenkowski's attorneys are trying to resolve the matter with a less severe charge than the Justice Department is considering, the sources said.

Under a rule of the House Democratic Caucus, Rostenkowski would have to step down from his committee chairmanship if he were indicted on a felony punishable by at least two years in prison. He could avoid losing the chairmanship if he faced lesser charges or in the unlikely event that most House Democrats risked a storm of ethical criticism and voted to waive the rule.

Rostenkowski's prominent role in major legislation has been readily apparent in the last few days. After several weeks of private meetings of the panel's Democratic members, the Ways and Means Committee yesterday began public hearings on health care legislation. On Tuesday, he attended a meeting between Cabinet officials and House leaders on welfare legislation. He also recently agreed the committee would consider ways to raise revenue to fund partial public financing of House campaigns under legislation that the House passed last fall but has stalled in a conference with the Senate.

U.S. Attorney Eric H. Holder Jr. earlier this month sent to the Justice Department an outline of proposed charges against Rostenkowski, and sources said at the time that he was considering seeking an indictment as soon as the end of this month. That could have put pressure on defense attorneys to seek a plea bargain because of the key role Rostenkowski could play in helping to pass the health care reform measure championed by President Clinton.

The negotiations between Justice Department officials and Rostenkowski's lawyers, which were first reported by the New York Times, are part of the usual discussions after prosecutors have made clear they plan to seek an indictment, sources said.

A law enforcement source said such negotiations do not harm the potential defendant's position and generally are used by defense attorneys to see what options are available to their clients. Rostenkowski's attorney, Robert Bennett, did not return phone calls last night. Justice Department officials also declined to comment on the case.

The two-year investigation of Rostenkowski, who has denied wrongdoing, focused initially on irregularities by House Post Office employees but later was expanded to include allegations that he misused his official accounts for postage, personnel, office supplies, leased cars and office space in his Chicago district. In addition, a grand jury reportedly looked into allegations that some of his Chicago employees were paid for work they did not perform.

Rostenkowski is completing his 36th year in Congress and is seeking reelection. He is one of the most influential members in the House because his committee has jurisdiction over the government's purse and matters associated with it, including health care, welfare, trade, taxes and other financial matters.

AN INDEPENDENT NEWSPAPER

The Rostenkowski Problem

HOUSE WAYS and Means Committee Chairman Dan Rostenkowski's lawyers are said to be, if not quite plea-bargaining, certainly conducting exploratory discussions with federal prosecutors about the terms of his possible indictment. It is hard to imagine a more delicate, not to say incestuous, situation.

The prosecutors work for President Clinton. The president wants—some would say needs—Mr. Rostenkowski to stay in place as chairman in order to pass his health care reform bill this year. But if Mr. Rostenkowski is indicted for a felony above a certain level of seriousness, he will be required under House Democratic caucus rules to give up his chairmanship. A potential conflict of interest exists between the administration's legislative interests and its law-enforcement responsibilities. The conflict is the worse because Mr. Rostenkowski's principal defense attorney, Robert Bennett, has now also become the president's defense attorney in the sexual harassment case in which he faces charges by former Arkansas state employee Paula Jones.

Mr. Rostenkowski, for whom the president also recently chose to campaign in a primary in which the congressman faced unaccustomed opposition, has been under investigation for nearly two years for various possible misappropriations of congressional funds. He has said throughout—even while refunding some of the disputed money last February—that he did nothing wrong. Now U.S. Attorney Eric Holder, Mr. Clinton's appointee, is reported to be preparing to indict him and to have sent a prosecution memo to that effect to senior officials in the Justice Department last month.

Mr. Rostenkowski is plainly entitled to bargain with the prosecutors as he pleases, if that is in fact what he is doing. It's his skin. Nor is it fair to say flatly that the prosecutors shouldn't bargain with him in the same way that they might with any other possible defendant. If his rights should be no more than others', neither should they be any less. But that's an easier standard to enunciate than possibly to achieve. Any decision to charge him in such a way that he would be able under the rules to retain his chairmanship and continue to work in the president's behalf—one of the possibilities said to be under discussion—would have to survive an extraordinary burden of skepticism and scrutiny.

The argument has been made, with cases precisely like this in mind, that the independent counsel statute that Congress is only now finally reenacting should be extended to cover members of Congress and not just senior officials in the executive branch. Our instinct has been to oppose such a step on grounds that the power of prosecution should only be farmed out in the most extreme circumstances and that the Justice Department has shown itself capable of vigorous prosecution of members of Congress regardless of party in the past. That's still our view, but this is a case that puts the department to the test. The way to pass the test is not to interfere. The president, his aides in the White House and the political appointees in the Justice Department should keep hands off. Mr. Holder is the prosecutor; he knows the case and the law. He should decide.

Rostenkowski Talks Said to Near Critical Stage

Sources Say Indictment to Be Sought if Compromise Not Reached

By Kenneth J. Cooper
and Pierre Thomas
Washington Post Staff Writers

Negotiations between federal prosecutors and attorneys for Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) are fast approaching a critical stage, with talks ongoing daily as both sides explore options to avert a possible legal battle that could continue for years, sources familiar with the case said yesterday.

U.S. Attorney Eric H. Holder Jr. likely will seek an indictment by the end of next week if a compromise cannot be reached, the sources said yesterday. Officials described the talks as "fluid" with final resolution unclear as legal arguments and offers are made by lawyers for Rostenkowski.

Holder has outlined to the Justice Department a broad case of conspiracy to defraud, including charges Rostenkowski paid employees for work not performed and misused official accounts for leased cars, office supplies and office space.

Rostenkowski's attorney, Robert S. Bennett, would like the prosecution to reconsider the decision to indict the House Ways and Means Committee chairman or at the least consider charges less than a broad felony conspiracy case. If agreement can be reached, a plea bargain would result, said sources, who described the discussions as typical of last-minute maneuverings in such cases.

Some prosecutors in Holder's office who have worked on the two-year investigation strongly oppose considering misdemeanors or any scenario that would lessen the charges.

Holder, sources said, is at least pondering a possible plea because of concerns that a jury might find Rostenkowski a "likable" figure. Also, there is concern that jurors might be predisposed to believe Rostenkowski was unfairly singled out and that his alleged actions were not unlike those of his colleagues.

. . . has denied wrongdoing

On the other hand, Holder also is considering a possible community backlash from letting a white politician off lightly while his office has been winning long mandatory prison terms for young black drug dealers. Holder supposedly is adamant that Rostenkowski serve jail time, at least six months, sources said.

Bennett, meanwhile, although confident that the bulk of the government's case against Rostenkowski is weak, involving petty incidents, nonetheless is concerned that some of the allegations in Holder's "kitchen sink" approach of bringing myriad charges might be difficult to explain away, sources said.

Allegations that several employees of Rostenkowski's Chicago office did no official work and that he bought personal gift items through his expense account at the House stationery store, are particularly problematic, sources said.

Rostenkowski, who has denied wrongdoing and yesterday made no public comment about the negotiations, is considered critical to President Clinton's efforts to pass health and welfare reform bills. The case represents a political "minefield," sources said.

Holder, a Clinton appointee, inherited an investigation that placed him in the position of having to decide the future of a key Clinton ally. Top-ranking Justice Department officials, also appointed by Clinton, have been careful thus far to avoid any appearance of political meddling and largely are leaving the matter to career lawyers in the department's public integrity section for review.

Under a rule of the House Democratic Caucus, Rostenkowski would have to vacate his chairmanship if he were indicted on a felony punishable by at least two years in prison. He could avoid losing it if he faced lesser charges or if most House Democrats, who would risk a storm of criticism, voted to waive the rule.

Pruden on Politics
By Wesley Pruden

Down and dirty for Mr. Rostenkowski

Let's get one thing perfectly clear: Lloyd Cutler represents only President Clinton's office. Bob Bennett represents the president's clinton.

This allows Mr. Cutler to keep to the high road, fretting over the institution of the presidency in an era of barbarian occupation, while Mr. Bennett gets to play the heavy, accusing Paula Corbin Jones, a pretty preacher's daughter, of being no better than Arkansas white trash.

However, no lawyer, especially in Washington, can rise above his client, and Mr. Clinton, who sprang from the very culture that produced Paula Jones, needs all the help he can get. It's foolish to blame Mr. Bennett for doing whatever he has to do.

Bob Bennett is probably the best there is at doing whatever he has to do, which is to cut deals for the rich, the famous, the powerful, and the guilty. Even in a city of lawyers, where no one can say the words "ethics" or "conflict of interest" without hiding his face to blush, the schemes Mr. Bennett gets away with in the interests of his high-profile clients can steal a man's most cherished illusions.

He is not without resources in behalf of his most famous and most powerful client. His access to his client's power gives him the potential to make life miserable for Eric Holder, the man who could send Danny Rostenkowski off to make license plates.

Mr. Holder is the U.S. attorney for the District of Columbia. He has been guiding the grand jury investigation into Mr. Rostenkowski's administration of his office, which has been at least lax, and maybe criminally fraudulent.

The U.S. attorney and his associates are said to have Mr. Rostenkowski squarely in their sights, with a felony indictment coming down soon, probably by Memorial Day.

Mr. Holder is known to think that cutting a deal to enable Mr. Rostenkowski to walk is absurd, and would be justice denied. He has rarely had a case that he felt more confident of winning. Nevertheless, no prudent man underestimates the power of the White House, any White House, to play down and dirty when survival hangs in the balance.

Hard, tough, mean

Just follow the bouncing ball: Mr. Bennett goes to the Justice Department, which is run by the attorney general who serves at the pleasure of the president, to cut a deal for Mr. Rostenkowski so he can remain in Congress to get the president's health-care collectives safely through the House. This is the feat on which Mr. Clinton's credibility and survival rest.

The U.S. attorney, on whom Mr. Rostenkowski's fortunes rest, works for Janet Reno, whose fortunes rest on Bill Clinton, whose prospects of defeating Paula Jones in a federal court in Arkansas rest on Bob Bennett. If Mr. Bennett persuades Janet Reno, who has to please Bill Clinton, to take care of Danny Rostenkowski, Mr. Rostenkowski can save Bill Clinton.

Anyone who never went to law school can see this for what it is, a colossal conflict of interest, the fix going in. Only lawyers and professors who dream of one day growing up to be superfixers themselves see nothing wrong with the arrangement.

If Mr. Clinton loses his fight for the health collectives, the Republicans will sweep dozens of Democrats from Congress in November, and when that happens you'll see people suddenly treating Al Gore with respect.

Nobody wants to get too close to Mr. Clinton now; even Mr. Rostenkowski is said to want to keep a little distance. There's the first faint trace of pink in the water. Incredible as the prospect seemed only weeks ago, frightened Democrats are asking other frightened Democrats whether they think Bill Clinton will finish his term. (The dispassionate guess here is "yes.")

In a plausible scenario just in from Nightmare City, the Republicans gain 25 seats in the House and pull to within one seat in the Senate, humiliating the administration and rendering it impotent in the run-up to '96.

When this happens, a delegation of senior Democrats, scenting disaster of unimagined proportions, trudges down Pennsylvania Avenue to take tea with the presidents. "Give us a Sherman now," they say. " 'I won't run if nominated, I won't serve if elected.' Do that and we can cut a deal with the Republicans to back off and let you finish your term. Spurn the deal and you'll get a strong opponent in the primaries. Count on it."

Well, no doubt fanciful. The Clintons may be conspiring even now to get Whitewater back on the front page, to make everyone forget about Paula, Rosty, the continuing humiliation of America at the hands of pipsqueak satraps like Haiti, North Korea and even Singapore, and trying to guess what that distinctive mark near the president's clinton might be.

Of pleas and Rep. Rostenkowski

Talk continues that the Justice Department is entertaining the possibility of a plea bargain for Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, and that the powerful chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee has his lawyer, the omnipresent Robert Bennett, engaged in negotiations. Word is that the chairman would like a deal that stops short of admission to any career-ending felony, and that the Justice Department is considering offering a misdemeanor plea in exchange for Rosty's resignation at some future date. Whether or not these specifics of the negotiations are on target, the very idea that a plea bargain is being negotiated is troublesome; troublesome because there can be little reason for it at this point.

What are the possible reasons for prosecutors to offer a plea? Basically, there are four. The first is that the courts are overburdened, and so in general government lawyers look to lighten the judicial load by settling as many cases as possible without the time and expense of full-blown jury trials. Second, prosecutors are often willing to allow a suspect to cop a plea in exchange for cooperation and testimony that will allow the government to hook some bigger fish. Third, the government might have a weak case, and fearing that they might lose in court, prosecutors could opt for a sure thing on some lesser charge. Or fourth, a political fix could be in.

The first two possibilities just don't wash in relation to Mr. Rostenkowski and the House Post Office scandal. However bogged down the courts may be, resources can be found to try an important case alleging political corruption at the highest levels. The idea that court time should be rationed, and so Mr. Rostenkowski should be given a deal, is ludicrous.

Equally ridiculous would be the argument that Mr. Rostenkowski could plead in exchange for testimony against some yet unnamed Mr. Big. Mr. Rostenkowski is at the top of the Capitol Hill food chain, and it is hard to imagine anyone whom prosecutors would consider it so important to convict that they would let Mr. Rostenkowski walk.

That leaves the last two possibilities — either the government's case is weak or the fix is in.

If prosecutors don't think they can convict Mr. Rostenkowski, then it is unfair of them to bully him into a plea bargain for something of which he is not guilty. It should not be the modus operandi of the Justice Department to coerce people who maintain their innocence, through the threat of spiritually and financially crushing prosecution, into signing admissions of guilt. If the government doesn't have the goods on Mr. Rostenkowski, then it should not even threaten him with prosecution, let alone corner him into an unfair plea agreement. It is not just a quaint saying that citizens are innocent until proven guilty. If federal prosecutors haven't the proof that they can be confident will convince fair-minded jurors, then they should leave it at that.

As to a political fix, such a deal would be as politically ill-advised as it would be morally repugnant. Confidence in government would not be restored to an angry electorate by the spectacle of a powerful chairman admitting to misdemeanors just short of the severity that would lose him his chairmanship, and then going about his business without censure from his fellow lawmakers.

But what if the plea deal were to include a promise of resignation by Mr. Rostenkowski? Not only would this do little to inspire confidence in Beltway ethics, such a bargain is not an appropriate goal for prosecutors. Either Mr. Rostenkowski is innocent of the charges U.S. Attorney Eric Holder has outlined for his bosses at Justice, in which case the chairman is fully entitled to his seat in the House and his position at the helm of Ways and Means; or Mr. Rostenkowski is guilty, in which case he should suffer the sort of punishment meted out those who are not members of the political classes — that is, jail time. Who sits in Congress is not a matter for federal prosecutors. It's up to voters — and to members themselves, who have it in their power to remove one of their own who has disgraced himself.

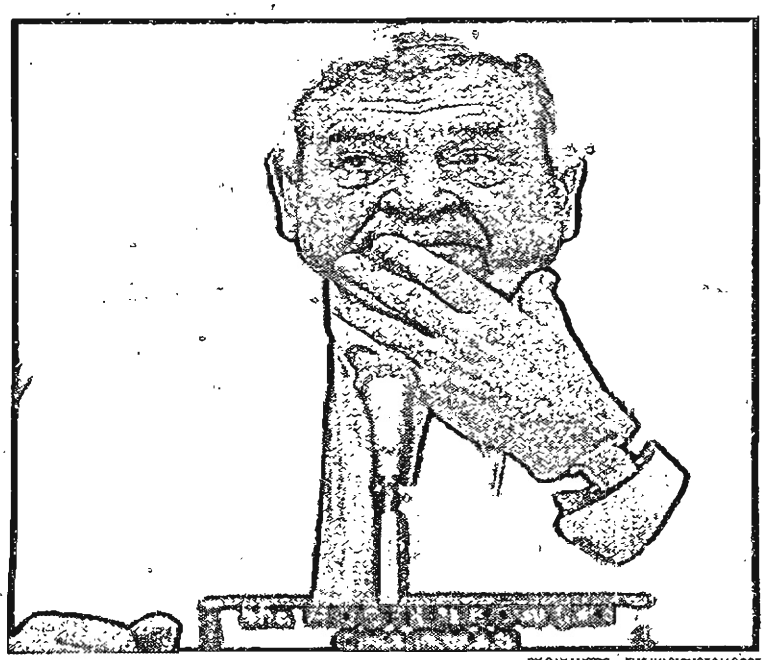
Rostenkowski Plea Accord Proves Elusive

Deal Would Avert Major Court Battle

By Pierre Thomas
and Kenneth J. Cooper
Washington Post Staff Writers

Lawyers for Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) and federal prosecutors continued to negotiate yesterday but were unable to reach a plea bargain that would forestall a lengthy and acrimonious court battle, sources familiar with the negotiations said last night.

Although progress was made toward an agreement, lawyers for the House Ways and Means chairman and those with U.S. Attorney Eric Holder still had considerable differences, sources said.



Prosecutors are pushing for a felony plea and some jail time, sources said. Rostenkowski's counsel has indicated there might be room for compromise, but remains firm that Rostenkowski should not be imprisoned.

"I don't know how he [Rostenkowski] thinks you can get a felony conviction and no jail," said one federal source. Another source said that if an agreement is reached, there will be disgruntled Justice Department officials. Some officials think Rostenkowski should get no leniency. Still others think federal prosecutors may seek overly harsh penalties to show their independence.

Rostenkowski's legal woes are fraught with political overtones. As chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, he is a key ally of President Clinton on such critical issues as health care and welfare reform. A Justice Department headed by Clinton appointees is overseeing the case. Holder was also appointed by Clinton. In addition, Rostenkowski's lead attorney, Robert S. Bennett, is representing Clinton on allegations of sexual harassment.

Justice officials and Holder, a former Superior Court judge and lawyer in the department's public integrity division, maintain that the law, not politics, will govern the Rostenkowski deliberations.

Federal prosecutors have outlined to the Justice Department a broad conspiracy to defraud the government case against Rostenkowski, including charges that the lawmaker paid employees for work not done and that he misused official accounts for leased cars, office supplies and office space. He has publicly denied all the charges.

BY RAY LUSTIG—THE WASHINGTON POST

Lawyers for House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) remain firm that Rostenkowski should not be imprisoned.

The latest round of talks came after prosecutors had actually set a date for seeking an indictment this week, said officials who nonetheless noted the situation was volatile with delays possible. During the weekend, officials had expressed pessimism that the matter could be resolved.

Rostenkowski and Bennett were expected to meet yesterday and then the talks would resume with Holder. As discussions continue, Rostenkowski appears to be waging a last-ditch effort to salvage a political career that has spanned 36 years. A guilty plea could give him a window of opportunity to do so, albeit a small one.

House rules do not compel a member convicted of criminal charges to resign from office or leadership positions, but such members are likely to face an ethics investigation and disciplinary actions that range from reprimand or censure to expulsion.

House rules state members convicted of a crime punishable by at least two years in prison "should refrain" from committee business and voting in the House—although they do not have to—until they are reelected or their presumption of innocence is reestablished.

A separate rule that pertains to House Democrats only requires them to relinquish committee chairmanships if indicted on a felony punishable by at least two years in prison, unless a majority of House Democrats waive the rule.

Rep. F. James Sensenbrenner Jr. (R-Wis.) said yesterday he had prepared two resolutions to expel or censure Rostenkowski if he accepts a plea bargain on any charges. "Rostenkowski could plead guilty to a felony and still keep his office," Sensenbrenner said. "Felons don't belong in Congress."

If Rostenkowski pleads guilty to a serious felony, Sensenbrenner said he would offer the expulsion resolution immediately. If he pleads to a felony punishable by less than two years or a misdemeanor, Sensenbrenner would offer the censure resolution, which could force Rostenkowski to give up his chairmanship under Democratic Caucus rules.

Unlike Democrats, House Republicans are not required to give up committee leadership positions if they are indicted on a serious felony and one, Rep. Joseph M. McDade (R-Pa.) continues as the ranking Republican on the House Appropriations Committee despite his indictment on racketeering charges.

Sensenbrenner said McDade's situation is different: "If Mr. McDade was convicted that would be a different matter. He's just indicted."

Rostenkowski may agree to jail, resignation

By Paul M. Rodriguez
THE WASHINGTON TIMES

Rep. Dan Rostenkowski is discussing through attorneys a plea agreement with federal prosecutors that may include his resignation from Congress but does not preclude a jail sentence, according to federal and congressional sources.

The possible agreement, which was the subject of meetings throughout the day yesterday between federal prosecutors and Mr. Rostenkowski's attorneys, may be announced as early as Thursday.

"It looks like a deal is in the making," said one person close to the negotiations. But "it's just too soon to tell [what the details are]... and anyone telling you different just doesn't know what he's talking about." The talks "could easily" break down, the person said.

If they don't break down, said another, announcement of a deal "could be this week, possibly Thursday."

What is going on behind the scenes is closely guarded, said those close to the high-stakes negotiations between U.S. Attorney Eric Holder Jr. and Mr. Rostenkowski's lead attorney, Robert S. Bennett.

While details are scarce, this much is known:

• Mr. Holder has "drawn a line in the sand" about what he expects from Mr. Rostenkowski in order to cut a deal. This hard stance stems from Mr. Holder's days as a judge in Washington and 12 years as a public integrity lawyer at the Justice Department.

• Line prosecutors, who have been conducting a criminal probe of the House post office for over two years, are arguing to superiors that the Illinois Democrat should be convicted of at least one felony count involving public corruption.

• Mr. Bennett has taken a hard stance on a number of the proposed criminal counts against his client, arguing that some are for inconsequential offenses or actions by the congressman that were permitted under House rules. Mr. Bennett, who once was a prosecutor, believes House rules have been inconsistent over the years and, as a result, are hazy.

• Mr. Rostenkowski wants to avoid an embarrassing and lengthy trial that could put on the stand not only him, but also fellow politicians, staffers, lobbyists and family friends.

• The 18-term congressman believes a resolution to the case could dampen some of the public indignity of a trial and of being forced to step down as chairman of the Ways and Means Committee. House Democratic Caucus rules require chairmen and subcommittee chairmen to step aside should they be indicted for any felony that carries a sentence of two years or more.

• Cutting a plea agreement could reduce any jail time for Mr. Rostenkowski.

tigation of illegal drug sales and embezzlement by post office employees and House staff.

To date, six former low-level employees have pleaded guilty to such charges, as has the former chief of staff at the in-house mail facility; an administrative assistant to former Rep. Joe Kolter, Pennsylvania Democrat; and Robert V. Rota, the former postmaster.

In his guilty plea last summer, Rota claimed he was also involved in a stamps-for-cash scheme with several members of Congress, including a "Congressman A" and a "Congressman B," who were diverting appropriated House funds to personal use.

Official House vouchers for stamps showed that Congressmen A and B were Mr. Kolter and Mr. Rostenkowski. Both men have denied all wrongdoing.

They have invoked their Fifth Amendment right not to testify before the federal grand jury.

Federal prosecutors significantly expanded their review of Mr. Rostenkowski after news reports suggested he may have hired so-called ghost employees and improperly used official House and campaign funds to lease cars and office space for personal benefit.

The Times reported earlier this year that Mr. Rostenkowski reimbursed the U.S. Treasury about $82,000 for congressional office purchases he made over a six-year period that came under prosecutorial scrutiny.

Mr. Rostenkowski said that while he did not believe he broke any House rules or laws, he was making the reimbursements using both personal and campaign funds on the advice of his attorneys.

What is going on behind the scenes is closely guarded, said those close to the negotiations.

Until recently, the Ways and Means chairman has not only maintained his innocence, but also maintained his normally hectic schedule of daylong meetings on matters involving health care, tax policy and welfare reform.

"If there had been something wrong, he didn't show it," said one of several members who have watched Mr. Rostenkowski closely. That has changed recently, however, amid news reports of a plea bargain.

Not only has his mood changed, said another member close to Mr. Rostenkowski, but concerns are running high in Congress that his departure could have a negative effect on President Clinton's domestic policy agenda.

Only a few Democrats, such as Speaker Thomas S. Foley, Washington Democrat, have stepped forward lately in support of the Chicago politician.

Mr. Foley, in a meeting with reporters on Thursday, praised Mr. Rostenkowski as "one of the most important sitting members in key areas of congressional legislation and policy before this Congress. He is a man of enormous experience and ability and value," the speaker said.

While saying that he had "confidence in him as ... a man of integrity and an able legislator," the speaker also said that "nobody in the Congress is indispensable."

Such talk about nobody being indispensable was heard often yesterday among senior and junior Democratic members.

"It's really kind of sad," said one senior House official. "The body's not even cold yet and they're picking at the bones," the official said, recalling the last days of former Speaker Jim Wright, Texas Democrat, who was forced to resign five years ago next month over questionable book and land deals.

Those close to Mr. Rostenkowski claim "the chairman," as he's often called, is still working hard to nail down hundreds of political chits he needs to build consensus for Mr. Clinton's health care reform package.

"He's still barking out the orders," said one member who deals with Mr. Rostenkowski regularly. "He's used to pressure," the congressman said, but he added that "it is beginning to take its toll."

Others close to "Rosty," as his friends call him, have detected a similar resignation in the broad and burly congressman's face, especially when news leaked last week about the plea negotiations.

"He became dejected, ... not just about himself but for the health plan," a colleague said.

"It's over," said one member who's spoken to him in recent days. "He's working hard not to show it," the member said, but "you can see the disappointment in his eyes."

Mr. Rostenkowski's office declined to comment, referring all calls to Mr. Bennett, who also declined to comment.

Attorney General Janet Reno must approve any plea agreement.

Rostenkowski Attack on Charges' Structure Is Expected

By Viveca Novak
Staff Reporter of The Wall Street Journal

Former Iran-Contra prosecutor Dan Webb, who has been retained by Rep. Dan Rostenkowski to defend him against an array of corruption charges, is stepping into a politically charged case that will probably mean a trial lasting several weeks and involving scores of witnesses.

Arraignment in the case is Friday, and the trial is unlikely to begin until at least this fall. In the meantime, Mr. Webb will be preparing to attack weaknesses in the government's case and is expected to file a series of pretrial motions to narrow it.

The 17-count indictment, though overseen by two smart and battle-tempered veterans of public-corruption probes, Eric Holder and John Campbell, has left some defense attorneys and former prosecutors positing that some of the charges may be barred by the passage of time and other problems. The Illinois Democrat was certainly aware of at least some of these possible flaws in the case when he rejected a plea bargain that would have sent him to prison for six months.

Experts in this area of the law say that the very language of the indictment seems to indicate that the government had difficulty matching its evidence with criminal charges.

That's not to say that the government doesn't have a case; U.S. Attorney Holder knew he would face tough scrutiny in bringing an indictment. But, when dissected and digested, it doesn't appear to be as strong as it seemed when announced last Tuesday, according to these lawyers, only some of whom represent aides to Rep. Rostenkowski.

Mr. Webb was brought in to replace Robert Bennett, who was Rep. Rostenkowski's third defense lawyer and had clashed with the lawmaker in recent weeks. Mr. Webb, a former U.S. attorney in Chicago from 1981-85, is a partner at Winston & Strawn in that city. As part of the Iran-Contra prosecution team, he won a conviction of former National Security Adviser John Poindexter; the conviction was overturned on appeal, partly because Mr. Poindexter had been granted immunity for his congressional testimony.

An early defense motion will probably attack the fact that prosecutors lumped into one count numerous instances of Rep. Rostenkowski's allegedly putting people on his payroll who did little or no official work. Fourteen alleged ghost employees are named in the indictment going back more than two decades. Mr. Webb is expected to say that each employee should constitute a separate count.

If the judge agrees, Mr. Webb should then be able to get charges involving eight of the workers dropped because the five-year statute of limitations has expired. Some of the allegations regarding the remaining six should be barred by time, too.

And if that works, then the government is left with a shell of its original case in terms of the money the lawmaker is alleged to have stolen. The ghost-employees charges account for the vast majority of those funds — $500,000 — but if many of the older alleged incidents are dropped out, the government's case appears to involve less than $100,000. But that would still be enough to put Mr. Rostenkowski behind bars for many months, if convicted.

Many of the alleged cash-for-stamps incidents, which are also rolled together, also took place more than five years ago.

Another possible snag for the government: In language that links together the first five counts, prosecutors allege a broad scheme by Rep. Rostenkowski involving the House Post Office, ghost workers, gift and car purchases. But the actual mail-fraud and wire-fraud charges in those counts appear to apply only to two of those four areas. Attorneys say that the sweeping language of the beginning of the indictment might thus be successfully challenged in a pretrial motion.

Other possible defense motions include moving the trial, for at least some of the counts, to Chicago. The defense might also raise the speech-or-debate clause of the Constitution, which limits lawmakers' liability for some official acts. That defense was successful for Sen. David Durenberger (R., Minn.) last year, although he has been reindicted. Rep. Joseph McDade (R., Pa.), indicted more than two years ago, has also raised that defense in a motion to dismiss the illegal-gratuities case against him, and a federal appeals court is expected to decide it soon.

Some attorneys say a glaring omission in the indictment is the lack of a tax-evasion charge. That could indicate that prosecutors can't prove that Rep. Rostenkowski himself pocketed the money he allegedly stole, and if they can't show that, the jury may be less likely to convict the 18-term legislator.

Rep. Rostenkowski has plenty of potential to be a sympathetic defendant, with his rumpled, grandfatherly image.

Moreover, many witnesses — including most of the alleged ghost employees — will testify about innumerable kindnesses that the lawmaker has done for them and others over the years.

Furthermore, they'll say they worked — perhaps typing envelopes at home, but still doing official tasks. Attorney James Cole, who represents eight of the 14 alleged ghost employees, says his clients have already told investigators they did official work, and will do so again in court.

The indictment charges that one of the alleged ghost employees was told by Rep. Rostenkowski not to tell the grand jury about some engraving work he did for him. The witness-tampering charge is perhaps the most serious in the indictment, not only because it carries stiff penalties on its own, but because, under the federal sentencing guidelines, it intensifies the penalties for some of the other charges.

But Mr. Cole, the engraver's attorney, says the incident wasn't as serious as it may seem. "When the story is told, it will be seen to be very innocuous," he says.

Mr. Holder said last week, though, that a number of Rostenkowski aides will testify in support of the government. And even those who have been granted limited immunity are susceptible to perjury charges if they lie on the witness stand.

Both sides may try to impugn the other's witnesses. On one hand, attorneys for some of the alleged ghost employees are being paid by Rep. Rostenkowski's campaign fund, a fact that prosecutors may try to raise before a jury.

On the other hand, Mr. Webb is likely to try to bring up the fact that former House Postmaster Robert Rota, the key witness on the cash-for-stamps charges, was allowed last year to plead guilty to only three misdemeanor counts in exchange for cooperating with the government. Furthermore, he hasn't yet been sentenced.

In addition, the jury is liable to learn that one of the alleged ghost employees — Rep. Rostenkowski's former son-in-law and the only one named in the indictment who is expected to back up the government's case — was involved in a bitter divorce with the lawmaker's daughter and may have a motive to hurt him.

Rostenkowski goods photographed

CHICAGO (Reuters) — The Chicago Sun-Times published photos yesterday of what it described as stacks of merchandise from the House stationery store piled up in the basement of a building owned by former House Ways and Means Chairman Dan Rostenkowski.

The items included crystal vases bearing congressional seals, 12 wooden armchairs still in shipping cartons, luggage and beer mugs — many similar to those mentioned in last week's federal indictment accusing the Illinois Democrat of fraudulent schemes to use taxpayer money for his own benefit.

The newspaper said the photos were taken in February by a photographer hired by one of the congressman's attorneys in the basement of a Chicago building owned by Mr. Rostenkowski.

"The congressman's lawyers apparently were taking inventory of the merchandise to buttress their contention that many of the items Mr. Rostenkowski is accused of stealing were actually being kept in storage and had not been given away as gifts or converted to his personal use," the newspaper said.

The Sun-Times said the photographer, Walter Perkins, sold the photos to the newspaper because he was not paid for his work by the law firm that hired him. Mr. Rostenkowski changed lawyers during the weekend.

The newspaper quoted Mr. Perkins as saying that when he entered the basement, "I couldn't believe it. It was like King Tut's tomb."

Mr. Rostenkowski, 66, is a key ally of President Clinton on health care reform and other major issues. The indictment, handed up May 31, forced him to give up his position as chairman of the powerful Ways and Means Committee, although he remains a member of the panel.

The Illinois Democrat has denied any wrongdoing and said he expects to be exonerated.

No VIP perks in cellblock for Rostenkowski visit today

By Paul M. Rodriguez
THE WASHINGTON TIMES

When Rep. Dan Rostenkowski is arraigned in U.S. District Court today, he will venture into a realm of government that lawmakers rarely encounter firsthand.

But the Illinois Democrat's excursion into the criminal justice system will not include the perks and privileges many members of Congress are used to, federal officials said.

Mr. Rostenkowski, who is expected to plead not guilty to 17 felony counts of public corruption, "will be treated with respect because of who he is, but no different than any other prisoner," a U.S. Marshals Service spokesman said.

"He will undergo what thousands of others go through: He'll be processed," the spokesman said.

A Rostenkowski spokesman said it was not clear if the former chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee would be booked before or after entering his plea to charges contained in a federal indictment handed up May 31.

"Those details have not been worked out," the spokesman said.

Either way, the booking process will be essentially the same for Mr. Rostenkowski as for any other suspect, officials said.

If he is processed before his plea, he will be delivered by his attorneys to a deputy marshal, who will take the lawmaker to the central cellblock in the basement of the federal courthouse at Third Street and Constitution Avenue NW.

There, Mr. Rostenkowski will be fingerprinted and photographed. He also will be required to answer questions and fill out forms for the probation department, the Bureau of Prisons and the Marshals Service.

If he is booked after his plea, the 66-year-old congressman will be escorted through the back of U.S. District Judge Norma Holloway Johnson's fourth-floor courtroom into a small holding cell with other prisoners.

Late in the day, the holding cell usually has a dozen or so detainees from earlier proceedings — some waiting to be processed, others waiting to be transferred to prisons or nearby jails.

A deputy marshal will escort Mr. Rostenkowski through a series of locked doors to an elevator that will carry them to the basement, where the 18-term congressman will be held in the central cellblock until he is booked.

The central cellblock, like the holding cell, is segregated by sex. Both are cagelike pens, but the cellblock is much larger and capable of holding dozens of prisoners in a common area where privacy is nonexistent.

After processing, Mr. Rostenkowski will be escorted by a deputy marshal to a public exit.

Mr. Rostenkowski will be free on his own recognizance but will have to check in regularly with probation department officials until his trial is completed and a verdict rendered.

What's more, he will not be allowed to travel far from his homes in Washington and Chicago without first gaining permission, and his passport probably will be confiscated.

A senior Democrat who calls himself a friend of the gregarious and burly congressman said: "After the indignity of going through the system, he'll find that it gets worse."

"The chill you feel from your colleagues can get pretty bad," said the senior Democrat, who asked not to be named.

Rostenkowski Team Adds A D.C. Voice

Chicagoan Hires R. Kenneth Mundy

By Toni Locy
and Pierre Thomas
Washington Post Staff Writers

District lawyer R. Kenneth Mundy, right, may be called on to use his persuasive powers before juries on behalf of Rep. Dan Rostenkowski.

Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) yesterday added Washington lawyer R. Kenneth Mundy to his defense team in what legal observers said was a smart strategic move to woo D.C. jurors in the likely event the case goes to trial.

By hiring Mundy, Rostenkowski, the former chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, put prosecutors on notice that the federal corruption case against him will be fought intensely.

Mundy, the defense lawyer who helped then-D.C. Mayor Marion Barry defeat the most serious charges against him in his 1990 trial on drug and perjury charges, is known for his ability to develop a rapport with jurors and sway them to his client's side.

He joins a stable of defense lawyers, mostly from Chicago, led by Dan K. Webb, a former U.S. attorney in that city.

G. Allen Dale, another Washington defense lawyer, said Mundy is among the best at relating to jurors. "You have to make them believe that you believe in your client. Ken Mundy does that," he said.

John T. Kotelly, who was a prosecutor in the federal sting operation known as Abscam, agreed with that assessment. "Ken Mundy certainly knows D.C. jurors as well as anybody in this town," he said. "Things play differently in front of D.C. juries than they do in front of Chicago juries. . . . If Dan Webb is smart, he will use Ken Mundy as much as he can."

But who will take the lead is the question asked by Reid Weingarten, a former prosecutor in the Iran-contra case involving illegal diversion of arms profits. "These are both guys who are used to running their own ships," Weingarten said. "It will be interesting to observe the dynamic."

Weingarten said the two lawyers could complement each other, Webb, "the lawyer's lawyer" with his command of the law, and Mundy with his charm and ability to think quickly on his feet.

Lawyers for both sides in the Rostenkowski case are to appear today before U.S. District Judge Norma Holloway Johnson. The purpose of the hearing is to set a schedule for motions to be filed. The defense also may take the opportunity to raise challenges to the indictment on constitutional grounds, which could delay it for months.

After negotiations with the U.S. attorney's office, Rostenkowski decided against pleading guilty and broke ties with well-known Washington lawyer Robert S. Bennett.

In late May, a grand jury accused Rostenkowski, a legendary Chicago politician, of engaging in a pattern of corrupt activities during the last 20 years.

The grand jury charged that the 18-term veteran of Congress abused his office in a range of ways, from putting "ghost employees" on his payroll and trading stamps for cash at the House Post Office to using his office account to buy expensive gifts for friends and tampering with potential witnesses against him.

Mundy, who grew up in Akron, Ohio, is well connected and well known in the community. He has said he became a lawyer because there were few other professional choices for blacks.

He graduated from Kent State University and Case Western Reserve Law School. After graduating from law school, he became one of the first blacks to work for the Federal Communications Commission, where he was employed for seven years.

Sources on Capitol Hill said Rostenkowski worried how his case would play before jurors from the District's predominantly black population.

With Mundy, he has a lawyer who has won important cases before such juries.

In the Barry case, Mundy is credited with raising enough questions that jurors deadlocked on the most serious charges against the former mayor.

In 1979, Mundy's rapport with jurors may have been a key element in the racially charged murder trial of Terrence Johnson, a black 15-year-old accused of shooting two white police officers in Prince George's County.

Johnson was acquitted of one murder by reason of temporary insanity and received a reduced sentence for the other.

Rostenkowski Wasn't Alone in Buying China, Chairs at House Stationery Store

WASHINGTON POST 7/16/94

58C-WF-180673 (SUB N)

By Walter Pincus
Washington Post Staff Writer

Attorneys for Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) go into court today to serve notice that they intend to challenge the government's indictment of the former Ways and Means Committee chairman on grounds that the executive branch is accusing him of numerous crimes that are, at worst, violations of legislative branch rules.

"How can you premise a criminal case based on rulemaking by one house of Congress?" one of Rostenkowski's attorneys said yesterday. A major approach of the defense team in challenging the indictment is that the separation of powers allows the legislative branch to make its own rules and punish its own members for violations, he said.

None of the charges against the 18-term congressman have drawn as much private criticism on Capitol Hill as the two counts arising out of prosecutors' accusations that Rostenkowski spent "more than $40,000" from his official House expense allowance at the House Stationery Store.

Rostenkowski is accused of violating the law by using taxpayers' money to purchase 250 pieces of fine china from the store between April 1988 and the end of 1991. Most of the china was allegedly given as wedding presents to friends and others.

The House clerk's quarterly reports show that other members of Congress and their staffs purchased $180,000 worth of china during the same period. The records do not indicate—and House officials will not disclose—who bought the other china or whether they paid for their purchases with their official expense allowances or private funds.

A spokesman for U.S. Attorney Eric H. Holder Jr. would not say whether investigators have reviewed House Stationery Store purchases by other members. Two House officials with knowledge of the investigation said they were unaware of any review of stationery store buying by members other than Rostenkowski.

Over the past 20 years, allowances given members of Congress have varied. After changes in the late 1970s, members were given an office allowance, a clerk-hire or payroll allowance, a travel allowance and, more recently, an allowance for sending out free mail called a franking allowance.

The total amount for each member varies, depending on the size of the district and its distance from Washington. But the allowances can amount to around $1 million, with the member having the right to dip into one pot if another is used up.

Under House procedures, purchases charged in the House Stationery Store to a legislator's office account appear in a monthly bill. At that time, the House member indicates which purchases, if any, were private and reimburses the government for their cost plus a 10 percent service charge. The remaining items are charged to the member's official office expense allowance.

Under House regulations established in 1978 and refined in 1979, a member's official allowance is not to be used for donations or gifts, other than exchanges with foreign dignitaries or legislators or flags that had been flown over the Capitol for constituents.

Since the onset of the investigation of Rostenkowski in 1992, there has been a sharp increase in reimbursements to the House Stationery Store. The repayments, which once averaged less than $400,000 a quarter on overall purchases of roughly $1.7 million, grew to more than $600,000 in a 1993 quarter that had about the same amount of business.

Sets of china were not the only items that prosecutors say were purchased illegally with government funds by Rostenkowski.

Between April 1, 1988, and Dec. 31, 1991, according to the indictment, Rostenkowski also used $23,000 of his allowance to purchase "approximately 60" wooden armchairs hand-painted with the Capitol on the front and the Illinois congressman's name on the back, $12,000 for "approximately 60" crystal sculptures of the Capitol and $2,200 for luggage.

All these items, the indictment says, Rostenkowski kept "for his and his family's personal use, or gave them as gifts to personal friends and associates."

In the first nine months of 1991, however, the House Stationery Store sold far more luggage than that purchased by Rostenkowski—at least $18,000 worth, according to the clerk's report. In June 1991, someone other than Rostenkowski purchased $9,745 worth of wooden armchairs made by the Hitchcock Co. And in 1990 and 1991, the House Stationery Store sold 48 of the crystal sculptures of the Capitol, according to one knowledgeable source who asked not to be identified. As with the china, neither the companies involved nor the House Stationery Store will disclose who made these purchases or whether they were ultimately paid for out of official or personal funds.

General Accounting Office audits of the House Stationery Revolving Fund for recent years show that, on average, only 13 percent of the store's roughly $8 million in annual sales was reimbursed with private funds along with the 10 percent service charge.

On the day of the indictment, Holder was asked if it would be hard to prove that Rostenkowski committed a criminal act in making his purchases because he was not the first House member to buy such gifts and pass them out. "Isn't that a case of shifting standards?" one reporter asked.

Holder responded that "there may be isolated instances where perhaps somebody bought a particular item . . . but we're dealing here with conduct, as I said, that is extremely broad, extremely long in duration, and I think that is what differentiates it from what you just described."

A review of Rostenkowski's official allowance spending at the House Stationery Store over several years shows that only from November 1990 to March 1991, when he purchased the chairs and the crystal Capitols, did he make office fund purchases at the store at higher levels than most members.

Rostenkowski Judge Warns Against Delays

Defense Scolded for Failure to Move Faster

By Toni Locy
Washington Post Staff Writer

U.S. District Judge Norma Holloway Johnson insisted yesterday that she would tolerate no delays in the corruption case against Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) and said she will first address constitutional challenges by defense attorneys.

Johnson, a former D.C. Superior Court judge known for her ability to run a trial, chastised defense attorney Dan K. Webb, of Chicago, for failing to initiate until last week the process in which the government hands over evidence to the defense. Webb was to contact the prosecution when he was ready to accept the evidence.

"We have lost a month" since Rostenkowski was arraigned on the charges, she lamented.

Saying she was "very disheartened" by the defense's failure to start the so-called discovery process until Tuesday of last week, Johnson vowed to keep the highly publicized case on track, saying, "It is my duty and responsibility to get this case moving."

Both sides told Johnson they would try to determine quickly whether the newest member of the Rostenkowski defense team, Washington lawyer R. Kenneth Mundy, has a possible conflict of interest in the case.

Mundy played down the concerns of the prosecution over his representation of Gerald W. Weaver II, a former aide to one-time representative Joseph Kolter (D-Pa.) and one of several people who cooperated with the government in its investigation of the House Post Office. He said he took Weaver's case after Weaver had testified before the grand jury and had pleaded guilty; Mundy represented him only at his sentencing on drug and obstruction of justice charges.

Rostenkowski, former chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, is charged with engaging in a pattern of corrupt activities during the last 20 years, including putting "ghost employees" on his payroll, trading stamps for cash at the House Post Office, using his office to hand out expensive gifts to friends and tampering with potential witnesses against him. He has pleaded not guilty.

After Webb and Assistant U.S. Attorney Larry R. Parkinson argued over the exchange of evidence, Johnson set dates for the key motions on constitutional issues to be filed: Aug. 5 for the defense and Sept. 2 for the government to respond.

Webb said he will file three motions challenging the 17-count indictment on constitutional grounds. The defense will argue that only Congress can define its rules and punish members for violating them, and because of that, the indictment violates the so-called speech and debate and rule-making clauses of the Constitution.

"Essentially, we believe the indictment is illegal and improper because it violates" those clauses, Webb told reporters after the half-hour hearing before Johnson.

Because the defense suspects that some of the evidence presented to the grand jury violates those constitutional tenets, Webb plans to ask Johnson to review the transcript of the secret proceedings to determine whether they were "tainted."

Once those issues are resolved, Johnson said, she will address defense challenges to any other counts in the indictment.

Rostenkowski team to cite Constitution

Mundy hired as co-counsel

By Paul M. Rodriguez
THE WASHINGTON TIMES

Rep. Dan Rostenkowski's attorneys said yesterday they will file motions within 30 days to dismiss on 'constitutional grounds a 17-count federal corruption indictment of the Illinois Democrat.

Dan Webb, the congressman's lead attorney, also announced that R. Kenneth Mundy, a prominent Washington lawyer, has been hired as co-counsel in what is shaping up to be a lengthy court fight fought on multiple legal fronts.

U.S. District Judge Norma Holloway Johnson remarked during a status hearing yesterday that she was "disheartened" at the slow pace of lawyers' exchanges of information in the case. She gave Mr. Rostenkowski's legal team until Aug. 5 to file constitutional motions and the federal prosecutors until Sept. 2 to respond.

Mr. Webb told reporters after the 35-minute hearing that he expects to file three motions arguing that:

• Mr. Rostenkowski, 66, is shielded from prosecution because of the Constitution's speech-and-debate clause, which provides for federal lawmakers' immunity for official actions.

• Mr. Rostenkowski, the former chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, is protected under the Constitution's separation-of-powers doctrine that gives Congress wide latitude in its internal rule-making process to set standards of conduct for its own members.

• The grand jury, which indicted Mr. Rostenkowski on May 31, may have been tainted by improper evidence submitted by prosecutors involving protected internal records of the House.

"Essentially we believe that the indictment is illegal and improper," Mr. Webb said. He said Mr. Rostenkowski will attack the validity of the indictment based on the general concept that "only the Congress can make its own rules" and enforce them.

Mr. Rostenkowski, who was forced under House Democratic Caucus rules to step down as Ways and Means chairman when indicted, is accused of diverting more than $640,000 in congressional funds to himself, family and friends through a variety of illegal schemes.

Specifically, he is accused of stealing about $21,000 in a stamps-for-cash scheme set up by former House Postmaster Robert V. Rota, who pleaded guilty to charges of embezzlement and diversion of House funds to "several members" through fraudulent stamp purchases.

Mr. Rostenkowski is also accused of hiring employees who did little or no official work for Congress, of accepting illegal payroll kickbacks and of tampering with a witness called to testify before a grand jury.

The congressman, who is seeking a 19th term in office from Chicago's 5th District in November's general election, has invoked his Fifth Amendment right not to testify before a grand jury. He has denied all the accusations against him and has accused prosecutors of engaging in a "witch hunt" because he is a powerful Democratic member of Congress.

Mr. Webb, a former federal prosecutor who is based in Chicago, was one of several special prosecutors that investigated the Iran-Contra scandal in the 1980s.

Mr. Mundy, who successfully downgraded Marion Barry's felony drug-and-perjury indictment in 1990 to a single misdeamenor, is highly regarded for his ability to establish rapport with local juries in favor of his clients.

In comments yesterday, Mr. Mundy denied that he was hired because he is a famous black lawyer who can win sympathy with a jury pool from a predominantly black city.

"Race is not involved in this case," Mr. Mundy told reporters. "There is nothing about this case that is based on race. ... That is not a factor."

Federal prosecutors raised an objection to Mr. Mundy's appearance in the case because of an unexplained potential conflict of interest involving his representation of a witness in the long-running investigation.

Mr. Mundy rejected such a claim and said he is confident that the judge or a legal ethics committee would find no such conflict.

While the legal fight begins in the Rostenkowski case, federal prosecutors continue to investigate separate accusations of illegal drug sales and embezzlement by other federal lawmakers, staff and lobbyists on Capitol Hill.

Lawyer R. Kenneth Mundy denies his addition to the Rostenkowski defense team was a ploy to curry favor with black jurors in the District.

House post office staff tells of sloppy operation

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Employees at the House post office described their workplace as a cesspool of sloth and disorganization that showed efficiency only when called to do special favors for members of Congress.

Prominent among those who tapped the post office for help was Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, the former Ways and Means Committee chairman now under federal indictment on corruption charges, according to several thousand pages of transcripts released yesterday.

Rostenkowski

The transcripts, from interviews conducted two years ago during an internal House probe of its own postal system, portrayed an operation where tens of thousands of dollars lay loose in drawers and even on the floor, where record-keeping was sloppy or nonexistent, and where some of the highest-paid employees spent their days reading newspapers.

"Any time a member [of Congress] wanted anything, I mean . . . just jump to it, you know, especially if it might have been a powerful member, you know, like Dan Rostenkowski," said Inga Lawson, a mail clerk.

Former House Postmaster Robert V. Rota "pretty much would do anything for Dan Rostenkowski," Miss Lawson told investigators for the Committee on House Administration.

While other House members and former members were mentioned as taking advantage of post office favors, Mr. Rostenkowski was singled out by several witnesses as particularly well connected.

On one occasion, a postal clerk was sent to pitch in answering telephones in Mr. Rostenkowski's office while his staff attended a Christmas party. Another time, a postal worker spent "months" stamping calendars with Mr. Rostenkowski's greetings and mailing them out. Post office drivers were dispatched to make special pickups for the Illinois Democrat, Miss Lawson said.

"Whenever he'd call or wanted something, in fact everybody had to jump to it, you know, regardless of what it was," she said.

Mr. Rostenkowski's office referred a request for comment to Dan Webb, his attorney in the corruption case, who did not immediately return telephone calls.

After the interviews were conducted in the spring of 1992, the House ended the political patronage hiring system at the post office and placed the operation under the control of a nonpartisan administrator, Michael J. Shinay.

The problems at the post office were central to the investigation that led to Mr. Rostenkowski's indictment.

The two volumes of transcripts, totaling 3,293 pages, also provide glimpses into the partisan bickering that accompanied the panel's probe — cozy arrangements with lobbyists, rides to the airport or other destinations provided to certain lawmakers and special pickups of campaign contributions.

One witness, former postal secretary Margaret Hatcher, told of a secret set of 66 postal boxes maintained by Rota which he used to collect "dear colleague" letters sent by House members to each other and forward them to favored lobbyists.

Rota also handed out large quantities of congressional calendars to lobbyists as favors, Miss Hatcher said. "Anything that came in the mail room that he thought would be of interest, he would always put away several cases for himself," including "boxes and boxes" of M&Ms candy that came in each year, she said.

Miss Lawson also told of people in her office who have "a 50- or 60-thousand-dollar job and yet they don't do anything." She said one co-worker was "supposed to be a computer systems manager, and doesn't know really the first thing about computers. And most of the day he just sits there and talks on the phone . . . and comes or goes as he pleases, reads the newspaper."

Rota pleaded guilty a year ago to conspiracy and embezzlement charges.

House restricts charging of gifts

New rules limit supplies to office

By Paul M. Rodriguez
THE WASHINGTON TIMES

Rep. Dan Rostenkowski was indicted on 17 felony counts.

The House Administration Committee notified members yesterday of a change in what office supplies and gifts may be charged to taxpayers.

In a one-page letter to "Member's Personal Attention," committee Chairman Charles Rose of North Carolina and California's Bill Thomas, the panel's ranking Republican, said charges to office accounts must be for "official purchases only."

The new rules, which take effect on Sept. 1, come in the wake of Rep. Dan Rostenkowski's $82,000 reimbursement earlier this year for improper charges on his office account for personal and campaign supplies and gifts.

Mr. Rostenkowski, Illinois Democrat and former chairman of the tax-writing House Ways and Means Committee, was indicted May 31 by a federal grand jury on 17 felony counts related to public corruption.

It was as a result of the grand jury investigation that the Rostenkowski purchases came to light.

Certain items currently available through the stationary store, which is run by the Office Supply Service (OSS), will be sold in the future through a gift shop, where the public, members and staff can make personal purchases.

The move by the Administration Committee to open a gift shop brings the House in step with the Senate and most other federal agencies that separate gift items from office supply items that can be charged to the government.

Besides standard office-related supplies, Office Supply Service has provided expensive executive-type goods, crystal and china products, and custom-made furniture to members. When purchased for personal reasons, there was a 10 percent surcharge.

Although furniture isn't expected to be available at the new gift shop, many of the non-standard office supplies currently available through the OSS stationary store will be sold at prices about 10 percent above cost.

Mr. Rostenkowski bought specially crafted mahogany chairs and other expensive gifts through OSS for constituents and foreign dignitaries.

Hearings sought on Capitol Police

House Republicans yesterday called for hearings on the replacement of Congress' police investigators during a criminal probe of the House post office.

Reps. Jennifer Dunn of Washington and Robert L. Livingston of Louisiana, Republican members of a subcommittee handling U.S. Capitol Police matters, questioned the actions of former House Counsel Steven Ross.

Mr. Ross has acknowledged persuading the U.S. Postal Inspection Service to be the chief law enforcement agency in the probe, replacing the Capitol Police.

Mr. Ross says he believes postal inspectors were more qualified. He also said there were constitutional problems with Congress' police conducting a criminal probe for the U.S. Attorney's Office, part of the executive branch.

GAO auditing use of helicopters

The General Accounting Office is auditing the use of Marine helicopters by the White House staff, a Republican member of the House said yesterday.

The audit by the congressional investigating office follows a controversy over use of the aircraft by White House aides for a trip to a golf course near Frederick, Md., leading to the resignation of White House aide David Watkins.

The audit was requested by Rep. Roscoe G. Bartlett, the Republican representing the district where the golf trip took place. He said he wanted to find out if staff members had used the helicopters for personal travel rather than official business.

VA may extend benefits for atomic test victims

Veterans Affairs Secretary Jesse Brown yesterday proposed making American veterans who suffer from health problems as a result of participation in nuclear testing by U.S. allies eligible for compensation.

The Veterans Affairs Department already provides benefits for veterans with diseases related to radiation exposure from U.S. atmospheric nuclear tests or the occupation of Hiroshima and Nagasaki after World War II. An amendment would extend those benefits to Americans who participated in allied — mainly British — atmospheric tests.

Legionnaires' bacteria found on ship

NEW YORK — The bacterium that causes Legionnaires' disease was found on the cruise ship Horizon, which was promptly taken out of service temporarily, Celebrity Cruises said yesterday.

The line's statement said tests conducted Saturday by the federal Centers for Disease Control and Prevention had disclosed the DNA of Legionella bacterium. The statement said the tests were done before the ship's water system was cleaned when it reached Bermuda. Celebrity said it believes the ship is safe now.

Public health officials are investigating four confirmed cases of Legionnaires' disease and 18 other suspected cases among passengers and crew on cruises on the Horizon since last month.

Salinger to head Normandy foundation

The nonprofit Battle of Normandy Foundation board of directors elected Pierre Salinger as its president.

Mr. Salinger, who had been named interim president, and Stan Kaplan, who had been named interim chief financial officer about three weeks ago, were elected unanimously to the posts by the board during a restructuring meeting Tuesday.

U.S. Files Biting Response to Rostenkowski Defense

By Toni Locy
Washington Post Staff Writer

In the pretrial war of words in the case against Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.), prosecutors depicted the former Ways and Means chairman as a common thief trying to hide behind lofty constitutional principles to avoid being held accountable for stealing from taxpayers.

Using biting, sometimes sarcastic arguments, the team of prosecutors, led by Assistant U.S. Attorney John M. Campbell, said Rostenkowski is trying to argue he is above the law by invoking the complex constitutional tenets as reasons to dismiss the indictment.

To them, Rostenkowski is arguing "the Constitution places the whole question of whether he systematically looted the public treasury beyond the reach of the criminal law."

"Ironically, these efforts by the defendant to shelter his conduct behind a legislative privilege are undercut by the sheer ordinariness of the crimes with which he is charged. He is accused, at bottom, of stealing money," the prosecutors said in court papers filed late Friday in U.S. District Court in Washington.

"The high principles he invokes . . . simply have nothing to say about common thievery," the document said. "Certainly, none creates the virtual license to steal that the congressman has imagined for himself."

Rostenkowski is charged with engaging in a pattern of corrupt activities that spanned three decades. He is accused of using congressional funds to buy personal gifts, hiring ghost workers, using official cars as his own and cashing in office stamps at the House Post Office. No trial date has been set.

In motions filed last month with U.S. District Judge Norma Holloway Johnson, Rostenkowski's lawyers, led by Dan K. Webb of Chicago, argued the 17-count corruption indictment should be dismissed because it violates the Constitution's guarantee of separation of powers.

Specifically, the defense is relying on the rule-making and speech-and-debate clauses. The rule-making clause allows Congress to make and enforce its own rules. The speech-and-debate clause protects lawmakers from being questioned about their legislative acts. The Chicago lawmaker's attorneys also argued much of the indictment relies on Congress's rules on hiring and expenditures, and it is improper for others to interpret them.

The prosecutors, however, in their response to the defense motion rejected all those arguments. "The charged offenses involve ordinary fraud, theft and false statements—not votes on bills, speeches to the House or any other remotely legislative act," they wrote. "He can be prosecuted for his crimes . . . just like any other person."

While conceding it is important for them to prove Rostenkowski violated House rules, the prosecutors said the defense "has chosen to mischaracterize the role played by these rules in the indictment." They wrote that they plan to use the rules as "simple evidence," but not their only evidence.

"Concepts like 'fraud' and 'theft' transcend any requirement for rules that say, 'No stealing allowed,'" the prosecutors wrote. "Most people know that it is wrong to take money out of the company till, or to put friends on the payroll who do no work, without a rule to tell them so."

They also argued judges and juries are capable of reading Congress's handbook and understanding its rules; judges and juries routinely read far more complex contracts and have no trouble interpreting them in deciding other cases, the prosecutors said. The prosecutors dismissed Rostenkowski's constitutional claims by citing several cases against other lawmakers where higher courts, including the Supreme Court, rejected similar arguments. The higher courts, they said, have not allowed other lawmakers to use the constitutional arguments to avoid criminal prosecutions. Even so, if Johnson rules against Rostenkowski, his lawyers would appeal those issues again.

In no way does the indictment deal with official legislative acts, the prosecutors said, insisting they took great care to ensure that the grand jury was not tainted with such evidence.

As for Rostenkowski's arguments that personnel decisions regarding all his staff are covered by legislative privilege provided by the speech-and-debate clause, the prosecutors said: "In this view, the defendant's decision to hire someone to clean the floor of his district office in Chicago is accorded the highest protection under the Constitution."

Rostenkowski Defense: Case Viol

By Toni Locy
Washington Post Staff Writer

Lawyers for Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) yesterday took issue with prosecutors' blunt description of the former House Ways and Means Committee chairman as a common thief whose case is no different than an average mail fraud prosecution.

"The error in the Justice Department's logic is glaring," wrote Thomas M. Buchanan, a member of the Rostenkowski defense team headed by Chicago lawyer Dan K. Webb, in documents filed in U.S. District Court in Washington.

"This prosecution cannot proceed precisely because Congress is not just 'any other public or private institution,' its members are not just 'company employees,' and its rules are not simply a 'contract' which the judiciary may freely interpret," Buchanan wrote.

"Instead, to ensure the proper separation of powers that form the bedrock of our democratic form of government, the Constitution provides certain protections against executive and judicial branch intrusion that do not apply in an 'ordinary mail fraud case.' "

Rostenkowski is charged in a 17-count indictment with engaging in a pattern of corrupt activities that spanned three decades. He is accused of using congressional funds to buy personal gifts, hiring ghost workers, using official cars as his own and cashing in stamps at the House Post Office.

His lawyers are asking U.S. District Judge Norma Holloway Johnson to dismiss the case because they contend that the charges violate the Constitution's separation of powers.

The prosecution "resorts essentially to name-calling, employing time-worn colloquialisms such as 'common thievery' and 'license to steal.'"

Judge Rules Constitution Does Not Shield Rostenkowski From Charges

16 of 17 Motions on Separation of Powers Doctrine Are Rejected

By Toni Locy
Washington Post Staff Writer

A federal judge ruled yesterday that the Constitution does not protect Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) from charges of political corruption.

U.S. District Judge Norma Holloway Johnson threw out Rostenkowski's motions to have 16 of the 17 corruption charges against him dismissed on grounds they violated the separation of powers doctrine in the Constitution.

Rostenkowski, former chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, is charged with engaging in a pattern of corrupt activities spanning three decades. He is accused of paying people with public funds to provide private services to him and his family, as well as using congressional funds to buy personal gifts and to hire ghost employees. He also is accused of using official cars as his own and cashing stamps at the House Post Office.

. . . lawyers plan to appeal

Precedent seems to be lacking for the proposition" that a member of Congress is immune from prosecution for decisions "to hire employees whose duties consist of photographing his daughters' weddings, mowing the grass at his summer house or other personal duties," Johnson wrote.

Howard M. Pearl, one of Rostenkowski's lawyers, said the defense team is "disappointed" by the decision. "There are significant constitutional issues presented by the nature of the indictment because it is based on violations of House rules and not criminal statutes," Pearl said.

He said an appeal will be filed with the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit. If necessary, defense lawyers said they will take the matter to the U.S. Supreme Court.

The defense arguments centered on the Constitution's rule-making and speech-and-debate clauses. The defense lawyers said those principles forbid judges and prosecutors from interpreting House rules on payroll expenditures, hiring employees or other uses of public funds.

The rule-making clause allows Congress to make and enforce its own rules. The speech-and-debate clause protects lawmakers from being questioned, or prosecuted, regarding legislative actions.

Johnson disagreed. "Other than an unsupported, expansive reading of the text of the rule-making clause, the defendant offers no reason why judicial interpretation of House rules offends the principle of separation of powers," she wrote.

She said Rostenkowski failed to explain "how the ability of Congress to make rules for itself will be compromised if courts are merely allowed to interpret the terms of those rules . . . in order to hold a member of Congress criminally liable for his alleged misuse of public funds."

Johnson sided with prosecutors that the charges stem from alleged violations of federal laws, such as mail fraud, concealing material facts and embezzlement.

But the judge said she was concerned about one count in which Rostenkowski is charged with converting public funds to his own use through Congress's clerk-hiring allowance. The indictment alleges that Rostenkowski paid people who did little, if any, "official" work.

Johnson said the charge would require her to determine what "official work entails." She, however, said she could rely on the definition of "official" found in the House rules or in appropriations acts.

Ex-Congressman Kolter Indicted In the House Post Office Probe

By Toni Locy
Washington Post Staff Writer

A federal grand jury yesterday indicted former House member Joseph P. Kolter (D-Pa.) on charges that he embezzled more than $40,000 in taxpayers' funds.

Kolter, a congressman from 1983 to 1993, was accused of conspiring with the House postmaster to convert stamps into $11,000 in cash for his personal use. He also is charged with making taxpayers foot the bill for more than $33,000 worth of merchandise—including china, luggage and jewelry—that he got from the House Stationery Store.

Specifically, Kolter is charged with conspiracy, embezzlement of public funds, concealing material facts through a coverup and aiding and abetting the conversion of postage stamps to cash.

The case is the latest in an ongoing federal investigation of the House Post Office scandal. So far eight people, including former House postmaster Robert V. Rota, have been convicted. Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) is awaiting trial on charges of embezzlement, mail fraud, concealing material facts and obstructing justice.

U.S. Attorney Eric H. Holder Jr. said in a statement that the Kolter indictment "demonstrates our office's continuing commitment to hold accountable all those connected to the House Post Office who have engaged in criminal conduct."

Alan I. Baron, Kolter's lawyer, said, "Congressman Kolter has maintained throughout that he was not guilty of any wrongdoing. We continue to maintain that position. We will plead not guilty to the indictment."

According to the five-count indictment, Kolter personally instructed Rota to give him cash in exchange for congressional vouchers—forms used by members of Congress to request stamps to mail materials that cannot be covered by the congressional frank. Kolter also allegedly told Rota to give him cash for stamps that he previously had received from the House Post Office.

The grand jury said Kolter obtained $6,300 from January 1985 to May 1987 through Rota, who also is from western Pennsylvania and was a good friend of Kolter's. Rota is cooperating with the government, according to court records.

Between 1987 and 1989, however, Kolter and Rota could not continue their practices, the grand jury said, because a new employee was working in the House Post Office. After that employee left, the two men resumed their business, the indictment said. From December 1989 to December 1990, Kolter allegedly received $5,000 in cash in the same manner.

The indictment said Kolter used a computerized list to compare his stamp purchases to those of other House members. Rota instructed post office employees to keep the list, according to the grand jury.

Former House member Joseph P. Kolter is accused of embezzling public funds, conspiracy and coverup.

Under law, members of Congress are prohibited from using government funds for any personal, political or campaign-related expenses.

From 1986 to 1992, the federal grand jury said, Kolter also improperly obtained more than $33,000 worth of merchandise from the House Stationery Store. These items included more than 650 pieces of china and glassware worth a total of $21,000; 40 wristwatches and clocks, worth $4,300; more than 30 Mont Blanc pens, worth $3,300; about 30 pieces of luggage, worth more than $2,000; and two gold necklaces, worth almost $500.

Under House rules, members could use the stationery store to obtain office supplies. When they did so, such purchases were charged to accounts kept by the store. The House Finance Office would then pay the bills and deduct the purchases from the member's official expense allowance.

The store also had a practice of obtaining some merchandise that members bought for personal use. Such personal purchases, however, were supposed to be paid for by the members individually, with a 10 percent service charge tacked on, the indictment noted.

Judge Postpones Arraignment In Kolter Corruption Charges

A federal judge yesterday postponed the arraignment of former representative Joseph P. Kolter (D-Pa.) on corruption charges but expressed concern that he was using knee surgery performed last summer as an improper reason for failing to appear in court.

"I am not convinced that the defendant could not get here at an earlier time," U.S. District Judge Norma Holloway Johnson said in response to a defense request to postpone Kolter's arraignment on conspiracy, embezzlement of public funds and other charges.

Earlier this month, Kolter was charged in a five-count indictment with embezzling more than $40,000 in taxpayers' money. He was accused of conspiring with a former House postmaster to convert stamps into $11,000 in cash for personal use. He also is charged with making taxpayers foot the bill for more than $33,000 worth of merchandise—including china, luggage and jewelry—from the House Stationery Store.

Johnson ordered the defense to file its constitutional challenges to the indictment by Nov. 28. Alan I. Baron, Kolter's lawyer, said he intends to make arguments similar to those of Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) that the indictment unconstitutionally infringed on Congress's right to discipline its own members.

Ex-House member Kolter is indicted over postal scheme

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Former Rep. Joseph P. Kolter was indicted yesterday on charges that he obtained $11,000 in personal cash from the House post office and billed his office account for $33,000 worth of jewelry, luggage and other personal items from a congressional stationery store.

Mr. Kolter, Pennsylvania Democrat, who was defeated in the 1992 primary after 10 years in the House, was the second current or former House member indicted in the federal investigation of the House post office scandal.

Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, Illinois Democrat and former chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, was charged in a 17-count indictment May 31. He was accused of converting $636,600 in federal funds and $56,267 in campaign funds to his personal use.

The government says Mr. Rostenkowski used official funds to pay employees who did mostly personal work for him; converted stationery, postal and home office allowances to his personal use; and obstructed justice.

He has pleaded not guilty and denied wrongdoing, but he was forced to step aside as chairman of the Ways and Means Committee until the case is resolved.

Early this year, Mr. Rostenkowski reimbursed the U.S. Treasury $82,000 for improper purchases of stationery and office supplies he claimed the House regarded as "gifts." House leaders have said they will investigate the reimbursement.

Rep. Austin J. Murphy, Pennsylvania Democrat, also has been implicated in the House post office scandal, mostly by anonymous accusers, in a variety of ethical and criminal violations.

Mr. Kolter was charged in a five-count grand jury indictment with conspiracy, embezzlement and concealing material facts.

Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, Illinois Democrat, was indicted in May on 17 counts stemming from the postal scandal.

"This investigation is continuing, and today's indictment demonstrates our office's continuing commitment to hold accountable all those connected to the House post office who have engaged in criminal conduct," U.S. Attorney Eric H. Holder Jr. said in a statement.

Alan Baron, Mr. Kolter's attorney, said the former lawmaker "has maintained throughout that he has done nothing wrong and we intend to plead not guilty and proceed to trial."

But first, Mr. Baron said, Mr. Kolter will challenge the indictment on grounds that only the House has the constitutional authority to judge a lawmaker's behavior while performing official duties. Mr. Rostenkowski mounted a similar challenge, but lost that motion in U.S. District Court last week. His attorneys said they would appeal.

The indictment said Mr. Kolter obtained $11,000 in cash by disguising his transactions at the post office as stamp purchases for official purposes. Between 1985 and 1990, the indictment said, Mr. Kolter instructed House Postmaster Robert V. Rota to give him cash in exchange for vouchers and stamps.

Former Rep. Joseph P. Kolter

On some occasions, the grand jury charged, Mr. Kolter bought large amounts of stamps and later exchanged them for cash. At other times, the indictment said, he obtained cash from Mr. Rota in exchange for postage vouchers — documents certifying that he had paid for or received the postage specified on the voucher.

Mr. Rota pleaded guilty last summer to three misdemeanor charges in a scheme to funnel cash to members of Congress.

Those members later were identified as Mr. Rostenkowski and Mr. Kolter.

The stamp scheme ended about May 1991, when the U.S. Capitol Police and the U.S. Postal Inspection Service began probing embezzlement in the House post office.

The personal merchandise Mr. Kolter is accused of obtaining with taxpayer funds at the House stationery store between December 1986 and April 1991 included:

- About 650 pieces of china and glassware, costing more than $21,000.
- About 40 wristwatches, clocks and other timepieces costing more than $4,300.
- About 30 pens costing more than $3,300.
- About 30 pieces of luggage at a cost of more than $2,000.
- Two gold necklaces costing $220 each.
- About 40 wooden card boxes with a scene of the Capitol on top, costing more than $1,100.

Rostenkowski Lawyers Seek Case Dismissal

By Toni Locy
Washington Post Staff Writer

Lawyers asked a federal judge yesterday to throw out corruption charges against Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) because federal prosecutors have unconstitutionally used possible violations of House rules to accuse him of a criminal offense.

Dan K. Webb, the Chicago lawyer heading Rostenkowski's defense team, argued yesterday that if Congress has not "criminalized" the rules, they cannot be used in a trial to prove that a crime has been committed.

Webb described the Rostenkowski case as "unique, unusual, unprecedented" during arguments before U.S. District Judge Norma Holloway Johnson. Rostenkowski's lawyers have challenged the constitutionality of most of the charges in the 17-count indictment.

The defense yesterday asked Johnson to dismiss the case because it violates the Constitution's separation of powers principle. Specifically, the defense lawyers say the charges are an affront to the rule-making and speech-and-debate clauses of the Constitution. The rule-making clause allows Congress to make and enforce its own rules. The speech-and-debate clause protects lawmakers from being questioned about their legislative acts.

Johnson said she will rule "as soon as possible. I do feel it makes absolutely no difference which way I rule," she said. "It's going to the Court of Appeals. I know it."

Webb argued that the bulk of the charges should be dismissed because they rely too heavily on House rules to prove criminal activity. He said the case comes down to one "relatively simple notion—can the government prove a violation of a criminal statute it is referencing in the indictment without first proving that the congressman first violated the rules of the House?"

Rostenkowski is charged with engaging in a pattern of corrupt activities that spanned three decades. He is accused of using congressional funds to buy personal gifts and hire ghost workers as well as using official cars as his own and cashing in stamps at the House Post Office.

Assistant U.S. Attorney John Campbell told Johnson that he did not recognize the case after listening to Webb. "It was like he was talking about some other case," Campbell said. "The case he described was an extraordinary, full-scale invasion by the government . . . onto Congress's . . . turf."

The case is not as complicated as the defense is trying to make it, Campbell said. It deals with "traditional" issues of theft, fraud, false statements and witness tampering, he said.

"This case does not threaten any constitutional principles . . . or institutions of government," he said. "It just threatens one guy who stole a lot of money."

As Though He Were A King

Some pertinent preelection reading is Dan Rostenkowski's brief in defense of himself and an audacious proposition. The proposition is that all the interesting things he is accused of doing with public money are no business of anyone or anything but the Congress in which he has flourished for 36 years and to which he will be returning in January in spite of his 17-count indictment for behavior that looks to the laity, and to federal prosecutors, a lot like thievery.

The charges in his 17-count indictment are that he made hundreds of thousands of dollars of payments to "ghost" employees who performed personal services for him, that he acquired ownership of congressionally leased automobiles, that he used official purchases from the House stationery shop for personal or campaign uses, that he diverted to personal use official funds authorized for postage and that he tampered with a witness. He is charged with diverting $724,000 in federal money and campaign funds to personal use in a pattern of corruption spanning portions of three decades.

He says the very structure of constitutional government—the separation of powers—is jeopardized by any judicial proceedings about these allegations. He says a trial is precluded by two clauses of the Constitution.

One says that no member shall be "questioned in any other place" concerning a "speech or debate" in either house. Another says each house shall make its own rules and punish transgressors. Rostenkowski says that House rules, which he calls "amorphous and transient," provide no standards by which a court could decide, for example, whether a member has violated the rules that grant "vast discretion" regarding the use of office funds and employees.

58C-WF-180673 N-154

As six more states prepare to vote on term limits, Rostenkowski is a relevant specimen of the political class.

In a stinging response, prosecutors say he is claiming that "the whole question of whether he systematically looted the public treasury" is "beyond the reach of criminal law." The "speech or debate" clause derived from the desire of the Constitution's Framers to protect candor in legislative deliberations. It pertains to "legislative acts" broadly construed, to include committee work, communications with other members and other acts directly relevant to deliberation about legislation. However, the Supreme Court has held that the "speech or debate" clause does not prohibit inquiry into conduct simply because it is done by a legislator, regardless of whether it is closely connected to the process of legislating.

One court has already rejected Rostenkowski's brassy claims. With biting understatement, the judge said that "precedent seems to be lacking for the proposition that immunity attaches to a congressman's decision to hire employees whose duties consist of photographing his daughters' weddings, mowing the grass at his summer home or other duties." Rostenkowski will appeal to a higher court, which probably will be just as unsympathetic about the lawn care at his vacation home in Wisconsin. Then there will be a trial, and Washington will weep.

When he was indicted in May, Washington was very lachrymose. Such is the solidarity of the political class, this city's bipartisan sympathy for him probably would not be dented even by a reading of the argument he makes on his own behalf. If his argument is cynical, it is perhaps forgivable as the best defense at hand. But if it is, as it probably is, sincere, it is a devastating indictment not only of him but of the kind of life that makes someone capable of believing his argument.

As six more states prepare to vote on term limits for congressmen and senators, Rostenkowski is a relevant specimen of the political class. Before he was elected to Congress in 1958, he was in the Illinois Senate, and before that he was in the state legislature's lower house. He has been a professional legislator since age 24.

Never having been in the private sector, it is no wonder he cannot draw—cannot even imagine—a line dividing public from private spheres. His indictment must be unintelligible to him. Furthermore, his conscience, and even his instinct of prudence, have been numbed by the corrupting life of unchallenged control of the House by his party during all his 36 years here.

Today he is asserting for people like himself something akin to what was called "sovereign immunity" when kings claimed it. His claim is evidence of a mental affliction that deserves to be called "incumbents' derangement." But his affliction will not soon be incapacitating. He will be reelected this year and, given the speed at which the mills of justice grind, perhaps again, and then again, before justice is done.

Kolter Pleads Not Guilty to Embezzlement

Former representative Joseph P. Kolter (D-Pa.) pleaded not guilty yesterday to charges that he embezzled more than $40,000 from taxpayers by misusing his congressional privileges.

Kolter, a congressman from 1983 to 1993, was indicted last month on charges that he conspired with a former House postmaster to convert stamps into $11,000 in cash for his personal use. He also is accused of making taxpayers foot the bill for more than $33,000 in merchandise, including china, luggage and jewelry, from the House Stationery Store.

Kolter is charged with conspiracy, embezzlement of public funds, concealing material facts through a cover-up and aiding and abetting.

The case is the latest in a federal probe of the House Post Office. So far, eight people, including former House postmaster Robert V. Rota, have been convicted. Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) is awaiting trial.

Alan I. Baron, Kolter's lawyer, entered the plea during an arraignment before U.S. District Judge Norma Holloway Johnson. Kolter was present; he had missed an earlier scheduled appearance because of his health. Both of his knees were replaced over the summer because of arthritis.

Rostenkowski Says He Needs A New Job

Outgoing Congressman Cites Legal Expenses

Reuter

Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.), the once-powerful member of Congress swept out of office in Nov. 8 elections, told the Chicago Sun-Times he has more than $500,000 in unpaid legal bills and is looking for work, the newspaper reported yesterday.

Rostenkowski, 66, said in an interview that he has $230,000 in unpaid legal bills for staff members and $300,000 to $400,000 in outstanding bills for his own legal battle against a 17-count federal indictment.

He has exhausted a $1 million campaign fund and a $1 million legal defense fund to pay attorneys defending him or his staff against charges he illegally exchanged cash for stamps at the House Post Office, bought gifts with government funds, hired ghost payroll employees and obstructed justice.

The 18-term congressman, who once wielded immense power as chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, said he was hoping to obtain consultancy fees at corporations and was considering lectureships offered by several area universities.

Kolter Seeks Dismissal Of Charges

Ex-Congressman Says Rules Were Confusing

By Toni Locy
Washington Post Staff Writer

Lawyers for former representative Joseph P. Kolter (D-Pa.) asked a federal judge to dismiss corruption charges against him yesterday because lawmakers were not given notice that long-standing practices on Capitol Hill are now considered criminal.

"The government seeks to criminalize, without notice, practices long known and conduct long allowed under House . . . rules in violation of the basic tenets of due process," Kolter's attorneys said in papers filed in U.S. District Court in Washington.

Defense attorneys Alan I. Baron and Jonathan S. Feld said the five-count corruption indictment against Kolter must be thrown out because it violates the former congressman's rights under the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution, which prohibits the government from depriving people of life, liberty or property without due process of law.

Kolter, a congressman from 1983 to 1993, is charged with embezzling more than $40,000 in taxpayers' funds. He is accused of conspiring with a former House postmaster to convert stamps into $11,000 in cash for his personal use. He also is charged with making taxpayers foot the bill for more than $33,000 worth of merchandise—including china, luggage and jewelry—that he got from the House stationery store.

While arguments made by Baron and Feld are similar to claims by outgoing Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.), who also has been indicted on corruption charges, they differ in their reliance on the due process clause.

"Before a person may be charged with a crime, there must be some reasonable basis for knowing that certain acts are subject to criminal prosecution," Baron and Feld wrote. "No such basis was present."

Prosecutors will file their responses to the defense motions next week.

Like the Rostenkowski lawyers, Kolter's attorneys argued that the ever-changing House rules confused even those who made them and should not be a basis for a prosecution.

As Rostenkowski's lawyers did, Baron and Feld also relied upon arguments that the charges against Kolter violate the Constitution's guarantee of separation of powers.

Prosecutors and judges are prohibited from treading on legislative turf by interpreting House rules, the lawyers argued. In October, U.S. District Judge Norma Holloway Johnson rejected Rostenkowski's arguments; the decision is on appeal. She is also handling Kolter's case.

The attorneys said that to defend himself, Kolter will have to show how his actions were part of his official duties and allow himself to be questioned about his actions as a lawmaker, in violation of the Constitution.

As a result, the lawyers said, "Judicial inquiry into these matters would directly impinge upon and threaten the legislative process."

Alleged 'No-Show' Staffer For Rostenkowski Indicted

Son of Ex-State Legislator Denied Getting Paid

By Toni Locy
Washington Post Staff Writer

A federal grand jury yesterday charged the son of a former Illinois legislator with lying about whether he held a "no-show" job with outgoing Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.).

James Nedza, 37, was charged with perjury and obstruction of justice for telling a grand jury investigating the congressman that he could not remember whether he worked in Rostenkowski's Chicago office from 1983 to 1986 and earned about $48,000.

According to the indictment, Rostenkowski's office records show that Nedza was paid the money at the same time that two of the congressman's daughters received a total of about $48,000 while working for Nedza's father, former Illinois state senator Edward Nedza.

The grand jury said Nedza claimed that he had "emotional problems" during those years. "I have very little recall of that period of my life," he told the grand jury.

He also told the grand jury that he could not remember working for Rostenkowski, receiving checks or even setting foot in the congressman's Chicago office. "I don't ever remember meeting him," Nedza said.

Nedza, one of several Rostenkowski employees called to testify before the grand jury, is the only member of his staff to be indicted. Most of the others were openly hostile to prosecutors when called to testify and are expected to be unfriendly government witnesses at trial, sources said.

Rostenkowski, the former chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, is charged with illegally exchanging stamps for cash at the House Post Office, buying gifts with government funds and hiring "ghost" employees.

According to a transcript of his testimony before the grand jury, Nedza said he could not remember discussing with his father whether there was a relationship between the money he received from Rostenkowski and the $48,000 paid to Rostenkowski's daughters.

He said he did not have a close relationship with his father, although he said his father told him to get an attorney before testifying.

Rostenkowski Asks Judge To Hold Trial in Chicago

Hardship on Corruption Case Witnesses Cited

By Toni Locy
Washington Post Staff Writer

Former representative Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) wants his trial on corruption charges moved to his native Chicago because he and many of the witnesses in the case no longer live in Washington.

On Friday, Rostenkowski's lawyers asked U.S. District Judge Norma Holloway Johnson for a change of venue because the costs of a lengthy trial in Washington would be too high for Rostenkowski, his former employees and numerous character witnesses they intend to call in his defense.

Rostenkowski is charged with engaging in a pattern of corrupt activities that spanned three decades. He is accused of using congressional funds to buy personal gifts, hiring ghost workers, using official cars as his own, and cashing in stamps at the House Post Office.

In an affidavit, Rostenkowski said he has closed his congressional office in Washington and moved permanently to Chicago. He said he intends to call Chicago community leaders, politicians, labor leaders and business owners as character witnesses.

"Many are of moderate means and would be substantially inconvenienced or impaired by the time and expense that an appearance in Washington would entail," Rostenkowski said.

Holding a two- or three-month trial in Washington also would be expensive for Rostenkowski, the former chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee who was defeated in November. "Unquestionably, it would be an unnecessary hardship and expense for him to face a lengthy trial far away from home," wrote his lawyers, Dan K. Webb and Thomas M. Buchanan.

The change of venue request was one of several pretrial motions filed by Rostenkowski's lawyers. Johnson ordered the motions filed so that she will be ready to move the case along when the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit rules on Rostenkowski's appeal of a ruling she issued in the case. In October, Johnson refused Rostenkowski's request to dismiss the charges on constitutional grounds.

Webb and Buchanan noted that few trial participants live in Washington. The defense lawyers—Webb lives in Chicago, Buchanan in Washington—said many of the prosecution's witnesses reside in Chicago. Rostenkowski's congressional documents are also there, because he donated them to Loyola University, court papers said.

Rostenkowski's lawyers also asked Johnson to dismiss the indictment because it is "duplicitous."

. . . has closed office and moved home

They argued that the prosecutors have improperly lumped "a series of sporadic, isolated, unconnected offenses" that spanned three decades into one "continuous scheme."

The defense attorneys said prosecutors John M. Campbell, Thomas J. Motley and Larry R. Parkinson linked four different "ventures" into one scheme to sidestep the federal five-year statute of limitations on how long after a crime has been committed a defendant can be charged.

Webb and Buchanan said prosecutors "seek to impose criminal liability on the defendant for offenses that allegedly were committed almost 23 years before the return of the indictment. The attempted prosecution of these stale allegations gives rise precisely to the type of unfairness the criminal limitations statute is designed to protect against."

Court Says Rostenkowski Ruling Stands

■ A U.S. appeals court yesterday rejected a bid by federal prosecutors to reconsider its ruling that the trial judge should weigh dropping some charges in the corruption case against former representative Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.).

The appeals court based its ruling last July on a recent Supreme Court decision that a law on false statements applies only to executive branch agencies. The ruling affected six of the 17 counts in the indictment.

The prosecutors had asked the appeals court to reconsider the case and address Rostenkowski's challenge to the constitutional nature of the law as it applies to Congress—a question left unanswered by the Supreme Court.

The appeals court instead sent the case back to U.S. District Judge Norma Holloway Johnson to decide the constitutional issue and whether the House Disbursing Office is an executive or a legislative agency.

Rostenkowski, who was defeated last November, has been charged with skimming more than $600,000 in taxpayer funds from various congressional allowances over 20 years. He has pleaded not guilty.

House Gives Up Its Post Offices

One of the last vestiges of the House Post Office scandal that led to the downfall of then-Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) will be erased today when the U.S. Postal Service takes over operating post offices on the House side. Postmaster General Marvin T. Runyon and House leaders will snip ribbons opening a new "state of the art" postal sales facility in the basement of the Longworth House Office Building.

The new "postal store" will be staffed by Postal Service employees, not the congressional workers who used to man the House's five post offices. The new facility will be "totally independent of the House . . . just like a post office out in Annandale," said James Lafferty, a spokesman for the chief administrative officer of the House.

The agency is planning 13 sales facilities on the House side and the Longworth facility will be a prototype for revamped postal lobbies planned across the nation.

The Senate will continue to operate its own post offices.

One postal perk won't change: House members can still place mail for their districts in orange mail bags that are supposed to give them speedier than normal service back to their home post offices.

Rostenkowski Employee Guilty of Perjury

Office Cleaner Convicted of Lying to Grand Jury About Congressman

Associated Press

In the first trial stemming from an investigation of former representative Dan Rostenkowski's finances, a man who received $90,000 for cleaning his office was convicted yesterday of lying to a federal grand jury.

Robert Russo was found guilty by a U.S. District Court jury of one count of perjury and one count of obstruction of justice. Each count carries a maximum of five years in prison and a $250,000 fine. He will be sentenced Feb. 7, but remains free on personal recognizance.

He was charged in April with deliberately withholding evidence from grand jurors investigating the former congressman and lying when he told them that he worked for 12 years at the Rostenkowski job five days a week, every other week, and knew of no one else who performed the work.

Outside the courtroom, a glassy-eyed Russo consoled his tearful wife, Irene. The Russos, prosecution and defense attorneys and jurors declined comment.

The defense contended Russo was snared unjustly in the government's effort to convict Rostenkowski, the Chicago Democrat who headed the tax-writing House Ways and Means Committee.

The defense said Russo, a 58-year-old retired Chicago Water Department employee, has Parkinson's disease and probably suffered memory loss and had difficulty following instructions when he appeared before the grand jury in 1993.

Prosecutors denied they targeted Russo, saying he had received immunity to testify and only had to tell the truth about his cleaning job from 1976 to 1987.

The government suggested Russo did little work, if any, and that the money really paid for Russo's wife to clean Rostenkowski's homes in Chicago and Wisconsin.

The Russos lived next door to Rostenkowski in Chicago and had a cottage in Wisconsin near his summer home.

Neither the Russos nor Rostenkowski testified.

Rostenkowski was charged in May 1994 with using official funds to pay employees who did mostly personal work for him, converting stationery, postal and district office allowances to personal use and obstructing justice.

He pleaded not guilty and awaits trial. He lost his bid for a 19th term last fall.

One of his defense lawyers, Howard Pearl of Chicago, said Wednesday's verdict "has no implication for Mr. Rostenkowski."

Rostenkowski's indictment outlined alleged fraudulent salaries totaling more than $500,000 for 14 office employees from 1971 to 1992, without naming them. The description for "Employee 7" corresponded to information in Russo's indictment.

About a week before Russo's indictment, James Nedza, the son of a former Illinois lawmaker, pleaded guilty to obstructing justice by lying to the grand jury about what prosecutors called his "no show" job for Rostenkowski.

The government focus on Rostenkowski stemmed from a 1991 investigation into the U.S. House Post Office's operation.

May Trial Date Is Set In Rostenkowski Case

Reuter

A federal judge yesterday set a May 15 trial date for former representative Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) after rejecting a defense request to move the corruption trial to Illinois.

U.S. District Judge Norma Holloway Johnson turned down a bid by Rostenkowski's lawyers to have the criminal case transferred to Chicago, where the former Democratic lawmaker lives. She said Rostenkowski's alleged scheme to defraud Congress took place here, that the documents and many prosecution witnesses were from this area and that Rostenkowski can bear the expense of a trial here.

Rostenkowski, a House member from 1959 until his defeat a year ago, has pleaded not guilty to a 17-count indictment charging him with skimming more than $600,000 in taxpayer funds from various congressional allowances over 20 years. The former powerful House Ways and Means Committee chairman allegedly used the money to benefit himself, his family and friends, employed staffers who did little or no official work and obstructed justice.

In another ruling, Johnson gave prosecutors one week to turn over any exculpatory material to defense lawyers. She set a May 15 trial date and estimated the trial would last about two months.

The next step in the case will focus on a U.S. appeals court ruling that ordered Johnson to consider whether six counts of the indictment can survive in view of a recent U.S. Supreme Court decision that a law on false statements applies only to executive branch agencies.

Rostenkowski's Plea Bargain Overture Rejected

Trial in Two-Year-Old Corruption Case Could Await Appeals Lasting Up to a Year

By Toni Locy
Washington Post Staff Writer

Efforts by lawyers for former representative Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) to negotiate a plea bargain have failed, keeping alive a nearly two-year-old corruption case that could become mired in appeals for up to another year.

A source familiar with the case said Dan Webb, Rostenkowski's lead defense lawyer, approached prosecutors in the office of U.S. Attorney Eric H. Holder Jr. during the past month to see if they could agree on a deal.

The source, who requested anonymity, said Webb would have been "remiss" had he not checked "the temperature" of prosecutors at this point in the case, once one of the highest profile prosecutions in Washington but which lost considerable altitude since Rostenkowski was defeated for reelection in 1994.

Discussions about a plea were held but, within the past week, the talks ended without an agreement, the source said. "There was not enough common ground," the source said, declining to be more specific and adding that neither side has ruled out the possibility similar discussions could occur again.

The overture came as U.S. District Judge Norma Holloway Johnson tried to steer the case toward trial, which she set for May 15 while acknowledging the date could, and probably would, change. She plans to hold another hearing Jan. 31 on complicated legal issues that already have been the subject of appeals and probably will be again. Before his indictment in May 1994, Rostenkowski was so adamantly opposed to a deal that he fired his lawyer at the time, Robert S. Bennett, who had come close to gaining an agreement with prosecutors.

Once the powerful chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, Rostenkowski, 68, is accused of misusing his office through a pattern of corruption that spanned three decades.

He is charged with converting to his personal use more than $600,000 in federal funds and $50,000 in campaign contributions.

The 17-count indictment alleged he exchanged official postage vouchers for cash at the House Post Office, bought gifts and personal items with government funds at the House Stationery Store and paid more than a dozen employees who did little or no work.

In July, a three-judge panel of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit issued a complex ruling, buoying Rostenkowski's lawyers by dismissing some charges but sending the rest of the case back to Johnson to resolve. The panel also rejected Rostenkowski's arguments that the entire indictment was illegal and violated the Constitution's separation-of-powers doctrine.

Johnson must decide whether to dismiss six charges that Rostenkowski lied to Congress and the Federal Election Commission, something the U.S. Supreme Court said last year was no longer a crime under a "false statements" law prosecutors had used in the case.

Lawyers familiar with the case say defense attorneys would launch another round of appeals if Johnson rules against Rostenkowski. If that happens, the case could not go to trial in May and would be delayed several more months.

The case, which stems from an investigation of the House Post Office, led to the end of Rostenkowski's 36-year tour in Congress. He was beaten by a political neophyte, Republican Michael Patrick Flanagan.

Ex-Employee Charged In Rostenkowski Case

Lawyer Sees an Attempt for Pressure

Associated Press

A former Chicago city employee who earned $90,000 over 12 years for cleaning Dan Rostenkowski's offices has been charged with lying to a federal grand jury about his work for the ex-congressman.

The indictment released Friday charges Robert Russo with one felony count each of perjury and obstruction of justice. If he is convicted, the maximum penalty for each charge is five years in prison and a $250,000 fine.

The charges are the second development in a week in the political corruption case against Rostenkowski, a Chicago Democrat.

On April 13, a former Illinois state lawmaker's son pleaded guilty to obstructing justice by lying to the grand jury about what prosecutors called his "no show" job for Rostenkowski.

Russo's lawyer, Raymond Banoun, said it was "a very unfortunate and very misguided action by the government to indict a person on a mere minuscule issue . . . and the only way I can explain it is that they feel somehow they're going to put pressure on Rostenkowski."

One of Rostenkowski's lawyers, Tom Buchanan, agreed with that assessment and said, "I don't think it's going to work."

Rostenkowski was indicted in May 1994 on charges he used official funds to pay employees who did mostly personal work for him; converted stationery, postal and home office allowances to his personal use; and obstructed justice.

Rostenkowski has pleaded not guilty, and his lawyers are trying to have the charges in the 17-count indictment dismissed. He lost reelection.

Rostenkowski's indictment outlined alleged fraudulent salaries, totaling more than $500,000, for 14 employees in his offices from 1971 to 1992, without identifying the employees by name. But the description for "Employee 7" corresponds to information in Friday's indictment of Russo.

The perjury count charges Russo lied to the grand jury Sept. 21, 1993, by claiming he knew of no one else who cleaned the office and that he worked five days a week, every other week.

The obstruction of justice charge says Russo deliberately withheld evidence from the grand jury.

Chicago Death To

By Megan Garvey
Washington Post Staff Writer

CHICAGO, July 18—City authorities today raised the death toll in Chicago's heat disaster to 376 and said the number of deaths at least partly attributable to five days of 100-degree heat could reach 500.

Although the flow of bodies into Cook County morgue finally slowed to a trickle today, 120 corpses still await autopsies. With all 222 bays filled, morgue officials over the weekend had to call in refrigeration trucks to handle the overflow of bodies, most of them elderly people.

The city has begun to investigate how well the heat emergency was handled. The Illinois state legislature also has scheduled hearings on the disaster.

"We are assessing what we have done and what more could have been done," said Jim Williams, press secretary to Mayor Richard M. Daley (D). "The mayor is terribly concerned and upset about this tragedy. As far as all the criticism, it is expected."

There was no shortage of it.

Senior citizen groups criticized the police. The mayor's office was criticized for being unprepared for a heat emergency and city officials were cited for failing to check on the elderly door to door.

The death toll underscored the vulnerability of elderly people who often live in relative anonymity in large urban centers. Chicago, for example, has more than 443,000 residents age 60 or over and 800 city employees charged with keeping tabs on them.

Appeals Court Narrows Rostenkowski Case

Some Counts Against Former House Chairman Based on Vague Rules, Panel Says

By Kenneth J. Cooper
Washington Post Staff Writer

A federal appeals court yesterday narrowed the government's 17-count indictment of former representative Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) on corruption charges, dismissing several allegations because they were based on vague House rules.

The three-judge panel rejected Rostenkowski's contention that the entire indictment should be dismissed as an unconstitutional intrusion on Congress's right to set its own rules. But the judges ordered a lower court to review six counts of lying to Congress, an act the Supreme Court recently ruled is not a crime.

The 40-page decision by the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit cheered defense attorneys for the once powerful chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, and appeared likely to further delay his trial based on the May 1994 indictment. But Justice Department sources predicted federal prosecutors would still build a strong case on embezzlement and other serious charges.

"I am ecstatic," said Howard M. Pearl, Rostenkowski's Chicago-based attorney. "I believe it emasculates a significant portion of the government's case."

U.S. Attorney Eric H. Holder Jr., noting the court rejected Rostenkowski's blanket challenge to the indictment, said the ruling "affirmed once again that members of Congress are not above the law and are accountable to the American taxpayer. . . . We're ready and eager to go to trial in this case."

The indictment, which grew out of a federal investigation of the House Post Office, accuses Rostenkowski of a pattern of corruption for two decades and converting to his personal use more than $600,000 in federal funds and $50,000 in campaign contributions. He is charged with exchanging official postage vouchers for cash at the House Post Office, buying gift and personal items with government funds at the House Stationery Store, paying more than a dozen employees who did "little or no official work" and buying vehicles with government funds authorized for leasing official cars.

The corruption charges led to Rostenkowski's defeat last November by Republican Michael Patrick Flanagan, then a political unknown. Rostenkowski, a 36-year veteran of Congress, has since returned to Chicago, occupying himself with speeches and consulting.

In an opinion written by Judge Douglas H. Ginsburg, onetime Supreme Court nominee, the appeals panel ruled on constitutional grounds that Rostenkowski could not be prosecuted on allegations that several of his congressional employees had performed personal tasks, not official duties.

The appeals court found that although the House prohibited use of a member's office payroll to "defray any personal, political or campaign-related expenses," that rule did not spell out the difference between "personal" and "official" activity. For courts to supply that definition, the judges said, would violate the constitutional separation of powers and the House's right to set its own rules.

"The life of a congressman—as incumbent legislator and perpetual candidate for office, whose official days end only after a round of nominally 'social' events at which he is obliged to appear, and his weekends and holidays are only an opportunity to reconnect with his constituents—makes the line between 'official work' and 'personal services' particularly difficult to draw," the court said.

It said Rostenkowski could not be prosecuted on some allegations but let others stand:

- A charge that one employee was "picking up laundry, driving his family members around Washington and working at campaign events" was dismissed because "those activities might . . . directly—even vitally—aid a congressman in the performance of his official duties."
- The government was permitted to pursue an allegation that another employee "performed regular bookkeeping duties" for an insurance company Rostenkowski owned, an activity the court said fit "no reasonable interpretation of 'official work.' "
- Prosecutors were allowed to seek to prove Rostenkowski used official funds to purchase gifts from the House Stationery Store because a rule clearly prohibited such gift-giving. But he cannot be charged with converting any items purchased to his personal use.

Rostenkowski's lawyers have argued that House rules were too unclear for violations to constitute crimes. U.S. District Judge Norma Holloway Johnson rejected that argument last October, and the appeals court agreed that no "absolute bar" to such prosecutions exists on constitutional grounds.

"While charges remain," Pearl said, "those charges will be much more difficult to prove and our ability to defend against them is enhanced."

The appeals court suggested Johnson could dismiss six counts accusing Rostenkowski of lying to Congress or the Federal Election Commission because of a Supreme Court ruling in May. In that decision, involving charges against former representative Carroll Hubbard Jr. (D-Ky.) that grew out of the House Bank scandal, the Supreme Court held that a federal law against making false statements to the government applies only to the executive branch, not Congress or the courts.

A Justice Department source acknowledged that the Hubbard-related part of the decision "stings," but quickly added: "We've still got a strong case. . . . We're still capable of going to trial and convicting Mr. Rostenkowski on some serious offenses."

Rostenkowski Trial Date Hinges on Appeal Decision

U.S. Could Challenge Dismissal of 4 Charges

By Toni Locy
Washington Post Staff Writer

Will former representative Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) finally go to trial on two-year-old corruption charges in May, as scheduled?

That depends largely on whether the Justice Department decides to appeal a ruling made this week by U.S. District Judge Norma Holloway Johnson in which she dismissed four of 17 charges against Rostenkowski.

The four charges in dispute involve allegations that Rostenkowski, the former chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, made false statements to the House Finance Office.

While prosecutors played down the effect of the loss of the four charges on an eventual trial, Howard Pearl, one of Rostenkowski's attorneys, said the four charges are important because they are part of the prosecution's "fundamental theory" of the case. "We have been chipping away at the building, brick by brick. We'll see what's standing at the end," he said.

The sweeping indictment against Rostenkowski accuses him of engaging in a pattern of corruption that spanned three decades. Among other crimes, he is accused of converting to his personal use more than $600,000 in federal funds and $50,000 in campaign contributions.

In her 10-page ruling filed Tuesday, Johnson said a Supreme Court ruling of a year ago required her to dismiss the charges because they did not involve false statements to an executive branch agency but to a division of Congress.

Prosecutors, however, argued that the House Finance Office could be considered an "agency" in the general sense, and that the Supreme Court had left open that possibility in its ruling in the other, unrelated case.

But they must now decide if that principle is worth fighting for.

If they think it is, the May 15 trial for Rostenkowski would almost assuredly be delayed.

Rostenkowski Fraud Plea Brings 17-Month Sentence

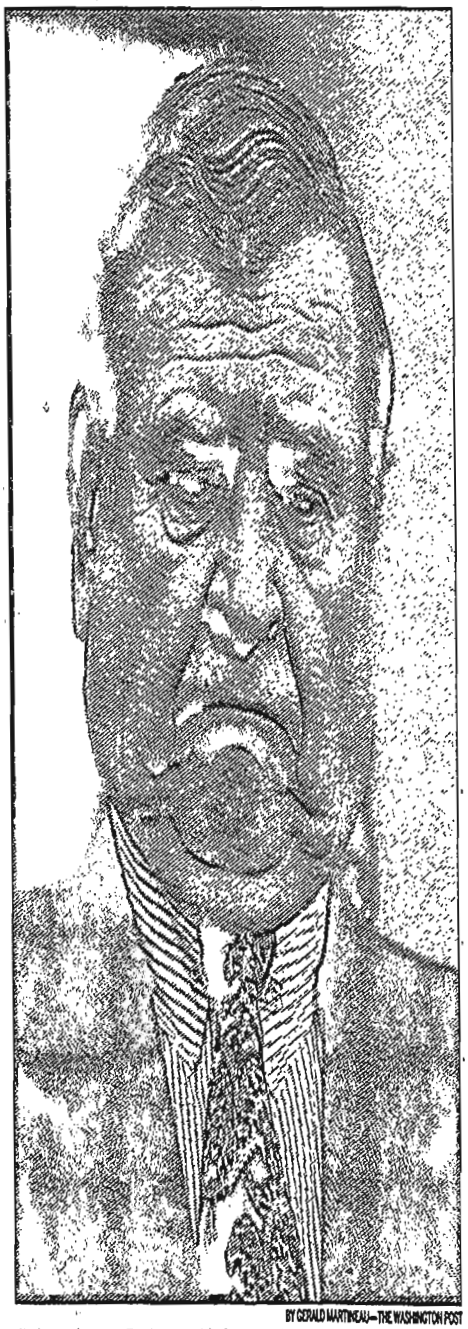
Former Ways and Means Chief Fined $100,000

By Toni Locy
Washington Post Staff Writer

Former representative Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) pleaded guilty in federal court here yesterday to two counts of mail fraud and was sentenced to 17 months in prison and $100,000 in fines in the final act of a legal and political drama that began nearly two years ago.

Long among the most powerful figures in Washington as the chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, Rostenkowski's downfall came over the use of public funds to pay employees who did little or no work, and to buy personal gifts.

Specific charges related to those payments were dropped as part of the plea agreement he struck with prosecutors, and a combative Rostenkowski told reporters outside the courthouse that his use of the U.S. mail to send the payments was a mere "technical" violation of the law.



Prosecutor Thomas J. Motley, however, told the court that Rostenkowski had "defrauded the United States and the House of Representatives, and he defrauded the citizens of the United States of their right to Mr. Rostenkowski's fair and honest services as a member of Congress."

In imposing the sentence, U.S. District Judge Norma Holloway Johnson called Rostenkowski's actions a "reprehensible" breach of trust in the House, which she described as "the very heart of our . . . democracy."

Rostenkowski, dressed in a worn blue tweed jacket and paisley tie, stood quietly in court as Johnson berated him. But he came out of the courthouse swinging and showing flashes of the bare-fisted, old-style Chicago ward politician he once was.

Defiantly describing his offenses as something everyone in Congress had committed at one time or another, Rostenkowski told reporters: "I have been asked by many if I am bitter because of the extensive investigation by the United States Department of Justice of my conduct while I served in Congress and as chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee. While I deeply regret the trauma that this intense scrutiny has bestowed upon my family, friends and supporters, I personally have come to accept the fact that, sometimes one person gets singled out, to be held up by law enforcement as an example."

U.S. Attorney Eric H. Holder Jr. flatly rejected Rostenkowski's description of the two felony charges to which the former congressman had admitted guilt. "People are not sent up to that institution," he said, pointing at the Capitol a short distance away, "to line their pockets."

Holder said Rostenkowski brought law enforcement to his door by his own actions—his use of government employees to remodel his house and take pictures at his daughter's wedding and his practice of giving expensive china and hand-painted armchairs paid for by taxpayers to his friends, to name a few.

Rostenkowski, 68, originally was charged in a 17-count indictment in May 1994 with engaging in a pattern of corruption that spanned nearly all of his 36 years in Congress. He was accused of illegally exchanging postage stamps for cash at the House Post Office. He was charged with using government employees to run personal errands for him. He was accused of pocketing federal funds and campaign money. And he was charged with using merchandise in the House Stationery Store as gifts to friends and constituents.

Those charges led to his defeat in November 1994 at the hands of a political neophyte.

As a May 15 trial date loomed, his lawyers, led by Dan K. Webb, and prosecutors hammered out the deal that Johnson signed off on yesterday. In addition to the agreed 17 months and the fines, the judge also said Rostenkowski will have to pay the costs of his incarceration, about $1,800 a month, if the Bureau of Prisons determines that he can afford it.

THE 17 CHARGES

Here are the original charges against former representative Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.). A May 1994 indictment said he converted $636,000 in federal funds and $56,000 in campaign money to personal use.

PLEADED GUILTY TO TWO CHARGES

■ Mail fraud (two counts)
Used mail to further frauds involving employees on payroll who did little or no official work and public funds used to buy personal gifts.

CHARGES DROPPED LAST MONTH

■ Concealing a material fact (four counts)
Applies to "ghost" employees; $73,500 in fraudulent car leases charged to the government; public funds used to buy personal gifts; and cash received from House Post Office for stamps bought with public funds.

OTHER CHARGES FROM 1994 INDICTMENT, DROPPED YESTERDAY

■ Mail and wire fraud (three counts)
Used telephone and mail to further frauds involving cash for stamps and personal cars bought with public funds.

■ Obstruction of justice (one count)
Asked grand jury witness who engraved gifts bought at House stationery store to withhold evidence.

■ Embezzlement (four counts)
Applies to public funds spent on personal goods and services and cash-for-stamps allegation.

■ Concealing a material fact from the Federal Election Commission (two counts)
Asked House postmaster to cash signed campaign checks; directed campaign committee to pay for personal car leases.

■ Conspiracy (one count)
Applies to cash-for-stamps allegation.

"The guilty pleas don't reflect the breadth of your crimes," Johnson said. "In your important position, you capriciously pursued a course of personal gain for you, your family and your friends. You have stained them, as well as yourself, and the high position you held."

"The penalty you and your family [will suffer] will be the burden of conscience, will be the burden of disgrace that will always be associated with your tenure in Congress," the judge said.

"For me, it's a very sad day," said former minority leader Robert H. Michel (R-Ill.), who had an office next to Rostenkowski's and played golf with him during the days when Rostenkowski was a power in the House. "He's a very fine human being personally," Michel said. "I'll never say anything bad about my friend."

During the dozen years he ruled the Ways and Means Committee, Rostenkowski was larger than life, a big man who enjoyed holding court in restaurants, particularly those that served his favorite dish, red meat. "I think Danny Rostenkowski was a mentor to many of us who were on his committee," said Rep. Robert T. Matsui (D-Calif.). "We looked to him for leadership throughout our careers."

Rostenkowski followed his father into politics, succeeding him as a committeeman in Chicago's 32nd Ward, which they ruled from 1935 to 1987. He was elected to the state legislature in 1952, at the age of 24. Six years later, Rostenkowski convinced Mayor Richard J. Daley to back him for Congress to pay off a political debt the mayor owed his father.

In 1980, when several senior members of Congress were voted out of office, Rostenkowski was given the choice of Ways and Means Committee chairman or whip. He took the committee, the most powerful on Capitol Hill because it controls the government's purse strings.

"I am very proud of my 36 years in Congress," Rostenkowski said yesterday. "I believe I have served my constituents with dignity, honor and integrity. I know of no member of Congress who worked harder on behalf of his state, his city or his congressional constituents. . . . With the events of today, I have now put this matter behind me and, when I am released from incarceration, I intend to be actively involved in public life."

Kolter Guilty in Post Office Scandal

Ex-Lawmaker Pleads to Fraud Conspiracy Involving House Postmaster

By Toni Locy
Washington Post Staff Writer

Former representative Joseph P. Kolter (D-Pa.) admitted yesterday that during his 10 years in Congress he walked into the House Post Office, put thousands of dollars in taxpayer money into his pocket and lied on vouchers that said he had gotten stamps instead.

Kolter, 69, who served from 1983 to 1993, pleaded guilty to one count of conspiring with the former House postmaster, Robert V. Rota, and others to steal from the post office.

By doing so, Kolter deprived citizens of "their right to have the business of the U.S. House of Representatives conducted honestly and impartially, free from corruption, conflict of interest, deceit and fraud," prosecutor Wendy L. Wysong said.

Originally, Kolter was charged with embezzling more than $40,000 in taxpayer funds: $11,000 from the post office and more than $33,000 in merchandise from the House Stationery Store. He pleaded guilty to only one charge yesterday, involving seven incidents totaling $9,300 in thefts from the post office.

He is the first former congressman to admit that such a fraud existed at the post office. Former House Ways and Means Committee chairman Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) vehemently disputed similar charges brought against him, even after he pleaded guilty last month to taking merchandise from the House Stationery Store and giving it to friends and using government employees to do personal chores, such as take pictures at his daughter's wedding.

. . . faces five years in prison

Still outraged by Rostenkowski's combative remarks—that his crimes were meaningless because he had simply done what everyone else in Congress had done—prosecutors said Kolter's admission proves there was a cash-for-stamps scam in the post office.

"This demonstrates that Robert Rota was giving cash to congressmen," said prosecutor John M. Campbell, head of the public corruption unit in U.S. Attorney Eric H. Holder Jr.'s office.

"We were prepared to prove it," said prosecutor Thomas J. Motley. "We would've proven it."

Prosecutors said the post office investigation is continuing. Rota and two other post office employees who cooperated in the probe are awaiting sentencing; no dates have been set.

U.S. District Judge Norma Holloway Johnson set Kolter's sentencing for July 31. While the maximum penalty he faces under law is five years, his sentence under federal guidelines will probably fall within six to 12 months, lawyers for both sides said.

Wysong said Rota, Kolter and "other selected congressmen" set up a system that was "convenient and largely untraceable" to steal funds from the post office. They did it, she said, in two ways: Kolter would ask for and get a large number of stamps through a signed voucher and then, a short time later, take them back and exchange them for cash. But most often, Rota simply gave Kolter cash directly after he signed a voucher on the spot falsely stating that he had gotten stamps.

Kolter and Rota kept the conspiracy secret by having Kolter go personally to the post office to handle the transaction, Wysong said. Rota also kept a computerized list that kept track of the volume of stamps purchased by members of Congress. The two men often checked Kolter's purchases to make sure they were not out of line with the others so they would not draw attention, Wysong said.

After Wysong finished her summary, Judge Johnson asked Kolter if he agreed with it. The former congressman slowly shook his head. "Yes, ma'am," he said softly. She cautioned Kolter that he must abide by terms of his bond and asked him if he would return to court for sentencing.

"Looking forward to it," he said.

Regarding the cash for cash transactions, [redacted] stated that, for as long as she could remember, ROSTENKOWSKI would personally cone into the Bank on a regular basis, about once per month, and exchange large quantities of small denomination bills into the largest denomination bills that the Bank had, which were $100 bills. [redacted] stated that the average amount of cash that ROSTENKOWSKI would bring in on these occasions was about $1000.00 but on some occasions the amount was higher, although she thought the amount was never larger than four of five thousand dollars.

[redacted] advised that there was no pattern to these exchanges and that they were always done by ROSTENKOWSKI himself and not a staff member or his designee [redacted] stated that, according to her memory, the only other Representative that ever did this type of transaction was [redacted] stated that at no time did she ever mention this to any other fellow teller, and they never mentioned it to her. [redacted] stated that they would have been just as likely to wait on ROSTENKOWSKI as she was when he came into the Bank.

[redacted] further advised that ROSTENKOWSKI would get packages of $2 bills about two times per month. These transactions were handled by ROSTENKOWSKI's designee, [redacted] and that on each occasion one to two packs of $2 bills would be requested. [redacted] advised that there were 100 bills in each package and that mainly these transactions were also conducted with cash. [redacted] advised that these requests would be made by phone by [redacted] but that she would send an aide to the Bank with the money and to pick up the $2 bills. [redacted] recalled that the Bank did not normally maintain that many $2 bills and that they would have to place an order with Riggs Bank and on some occasions, when Riggs did not have that many bills, an order would have to be placed with the Treasury Department which required a turnaround time of 3-4 days. [redacted] stated that no one else in the House got that many $2 bills.

[redacted] advised that she is close personal friends with [redacted] sister of [redacted] who is employed by the Clerk of the House, and that the first time she related this information of ROSTENKOWSKI making multiple cash for cash transactions was to former Public Integrity Prosecutor [redacted] during the investigation of the House Bank.

parts and labor. Some of the large jobs that [redacted] did for ROSTENKOWSKI [redacted] included [redacted] and an [redacted] stated that ROSTENKOWSKI paid him in cash for both jobs. [redacted] stated that he never asked ROSTENKOWSKI for any additional reimbursement for the work he had done [redacted] but in 1978 ROSTENKOWSKI told [redacted] that he (ROSTENKOWSKI) would take care of him. Some time later in 1978, ROSTENKOWSKI told [redacted] that he was going to put [redacted] on his payroll. ROSTENKOWSKI told [redacted] that he would get to keep some of the money for himself, and ROSTENKOWSKI indicated to [redacted] that once [redacted] ROSTENKOWSKI could no longer have [redacted] on his payroll. [redacted] stated that he never asked ROSTENKOWSKI to put him on the payroll, he never did any campaigning for ROSTENKOWSKI, never worked in or around ROSTENKOWSKI's Chicago District Office, and never did any federal work for ROSTENKOWSKI to warrant a paycheck. Nonetheless, in 1978 and 1979, [redacted] received a U.S. Treasury check from the U.S. House of Representatives (USHR). [redacted] stated that prior to receiving the checks, he was called [redacted]

[redacted] was then asked about the means by which ROSTENKOWSKI received his kickbacks from [redacted] in 1978 and 1979. [redacted] indicated that he was not certain if the money was provided to ROSTENKOWSKI in the form of cash or a check, but [redacted] stated that he was only allowed to keep a small amount of the money for himself. In 1978, [redacted] got a check for $1,927.75, less tax withholding, and [redacted] indicated that ROSTENKOWSKI gave him a maximum of $50 from the check. In 1979, [redacted] received a check for $3000.00, less tax withholding, and [redacted] indicated that ROSTENKOWSKI gave him a maximum of $900.00 from the check. [redacted] stated that he received both of the checks in the mail, but [redacted] was not certain what address the checks were mailed to. [redacted] then provided the interviewing Agents with his USHR W-2 forms from 1978 and 1979, including one of the envelopes which contained one of the W-2 forms. [redacted] also provided an envelope which was used to mail one of the U.S. Treasury checks.

[redacted] stated that other people were on ROSTENKOWSKI's payroll and had to kickback a large amount their paycheck to ROSTENKOWSKI. [redacted] stated that IRENE RUSSO was on the federal payroll and cleaned windows and vacuumed ROSTENKOWSKI's Wisconsin home. [redacted] stated that he found out about RUSSO because [redacted] RUSSO's son-in-law ROBERT C. UNDERWOOD (also known as "Chuck"). [redacted] stated that [redacted] did RUSSO's yearly taxes, and [redacted] ROBERT RUSSO) had to give a large portion of their paychecks back to ROSTENKOWSKI. [redacted] that the RUSSO's had to pay all the income tax for the money that was actually going to ROSTENKOWSKI. [redacted] did not know what percentage of the RUSSO's paychecks went to ROSTENKOWSKI, but [redacted] stated that IRENE RUSSO was only allowed to keep $20.00 from her paycheck for each time she cleaned ROSTENKOWSKI's home.

[redacted] did not know of any other people who had to kickback money to ROSTENKOWSKI, but [redacted] believed that [redacted] may have kicked back money to ROSTENKOWSKI. [redacted] stated that [redacted] was a [redacted] on the 32nd Ward payroll or ROSTENKOWSKI's congressional payroll; and ROSTENKOWSKI always talked about how [redacted] was going to build a library for ROSTENKOWSKI in the storage room at 1347-49 N. Noble, Chicago, Illinois.

[redacted] was then asked to sketch the first floor of 1347-49 N. Noble, Chicago, Illinois. [redacted] provided the interviewing Agents with his sketch, and [redacted] recalled the specific uses of each room, and in some instances, the layout of furniture. [redacted] was asked about the day-to-day use of the storage room at 1347-49 N. Noble, and [redacted] stated that from 1980 to 1988 he could not recall the storage room ever being used for campaign meetings or campaign purposes. [redacted] stated that, at the very most, approximately one percent of the room was used for campaign materials. [redacted] stated that their was never more than one or two boxes of campaign flyers in the storage room. [redacted] stated that in 1988 the storage room was filled with garment bags, televisions, ladders and scaffolding. [redacted] indicated that he had seen the Chicago newspaper and television coverage regarding the use of the storage room, and the photos taken by the news agencies looked nothing like the storage room [redacted] had seen in 1988.

ROSTENKOWSKI on federal time. [redacted] responded by saying that [redacted] mowed ROSTENKOWSKI's lawn at Genoa City, Wisconsin every week during the spring, summer, and fall. [redacted] stated that every Thursday or Friday (depending on the weather) [redacted] spent the day driving to Wisconsin and mowing ROSTENKOWSKI's lawn. [redacted] stated that every summer ROSTENKOWSKI would spend the weekend at his Genoa City residence, and ROSTENKOWSKI always wanted the house to be spotless when he arrived. [redacted] added that [redacted] did gardening work and racked the beach at ROSTENKOWSKI's Genoa City home, and RUSSO cleaned the home. [redacted] stated that every spring, ROSTENKOWSKI would give [redacted] an envelope filled with cash to [redacted] also received envelopes filled with cash to pay for ROSTENKOWSKI's [redacted]

[redacted] stated that in approximately August 1980, [redacted] ROSTENKOWSKI's [redacted] stated that [redacted] were paid for with money from the ROSTENKOWSKI FOR CONGRESS COMMITTEE (RCC). [redacted] personally hand carried the RCC check to [redacted] located in Chicago, Illinois. [redacted] stated that [redacted] had dealt with [redacted] in the past, and recommended [redacted] to [redacted] also indicated that sometime after August 1980, [redacted] opened an account at [redacted] stated that he does not know who paid all the bills on [redacted] account, but [redacted] was given RCC checks [redacted] two rehabilitation projects. One of the rehabilitation projects was at 1368 W. Evergreen, Chicago, Illinois, and [redacted] recalled that [redacted] (phonetic) was [redacted] of 1368 W. Evergreen.

The other rehabilitation project was a two story flat frame house located on the south side of Augusta Boulevard, between Greenview and Noble Streets in Chicago, Illinois. [redacted] partners in the rehabilitation project, but [redacted] could not recall her name.

[redacted] stated that ROSTENKOWSKI owned three properties in the State of Wisconsin. [redacted] stated that ROSTENKOWSKI owns two homes on Lake Benedict and one is located at Route 1, Box 234, Genoa City, Wisconsin, (414) 279-2241. [redacted] could not recall the other Lake Benedict address, but [redacted] indicated that it was adjacent to Box 234, and had the phone number (414)279-6218. ROSTENKOWSKI also owned a section of property formerly identified as Honey Bear Farms. [redacted] did not know what city Honey Bear Farms was located in, but [redacted] stated that it was near Powers Lake, Wisconsin. [redacted] stated that Honey Bear Farms was owned by the department store chain CARSON PIRIE SCOTT (CPS), but CPS sold the property in 1986 or 1987 to [redacted] (phonetic [redacted] DAN ROSTENKOWSKI, [redacted] and [redacted] stated that the property was then divided up by each of the five purchasers, and [redacted] recalled ROSTENKOWSKI describing his section of property as the property located on the point next to [redacted]

UNDERWOOD is currently employed by the COOK COUNTY ASSESSORS OFFICE (CCAO), and was interviewed at the CCAO located at 2121 Euclid Avenue, Rolling Meadows, Illinois, (708) 818-2031.

UNDERWOOD stated that he was a 32nd Ward Precinct Captain for twelve years ending in 1988 or 1989. As a Precinct Captain, UNDERWOOD worked for GABINSKI but never received a salary. UNDERWOOD stated that his work as a Precinct Captain was voluntary, and he worked so that he could get a patronage job with the City. UNDERWOOD stated that, "The better you do, the better job you receive." UNDERWOOD worked for the City of Chicago Sewer Department, Department of Human Services, and the Metropolitan Sanitary District (now known as the Water Reclamation District), all of which UNDERWOOD stated he received through patronage from GABINSKI. UNDERWOOD also stated that his job with the CCAO was from patronage.

UNDERWOOD stated that prior to becoming a Precinct Captain, he assisted Precinct Captains. As a Precinct Captain, UNDERWOOD stated that his job consisted of getting calls from citizens regarding bulk garbage pickups, car towing, tree trimmings, etc., and UNDERWOOD would contact the proper city departments to handle the problems. UNDERWOOD also stated that he was involved in local clean up projects, and organized neighborhood watch programs as a Precinct Captain. UNDERWOOD stated that he never worked for ROSTENKOWSKI and never received cash, a check, or anything of value from ROSTENKOWSKI or GABINSKI.

UNDERWOOD was asked about his knowledge of an interview conducted in Wisconsin of his mother-in-law IRENE RUSSO, and [redacted] stated that he contributes to a lot of campaigns and met Congressman DAN ROSTENKOWSKI through 32nd Ward Alderman TERRY GABINSKI. [redacted] indicated that since the early 1980's he has purchased tickets for the 32nd WARD REGULAR DEMOCRATIC ORGANIZATION's annual party and ad book.

[redacted] was asked if he ever stored a van at MC for ROSTENKOWSKI, and [redacted] stated that he stored a Customized Ford Econoline Van for ROSTENKOWSKI. [redacted] described the van as possibly being gold in color, and having a phone in the front and back. [redacted] stated that sometime during the Fall of 1986, or Winter of 1987, [redacted] received a telephone call from someone in ROSTENKOWSKI's office asking if they could store a van at MC. [redacted] was not certain if [redacted] (an aid to ROSTENKOWSKI) called him, or if [redacted] referred ROSTENKOWSKI to [redacted] but [redacted] recalled that someone from ROSTENKOWSKI's office told him that the Congressman's van was vandalized and ROSTENKOWSKI needed a more secure place to store the van.

[redacted] stated that MC has a large secure lot, with 24 hour security, and stored the van as a favor to ROSTENKOWSKI. [redacted] stated that the van was stored at MC for approximately five or six months until [redacted] received a call from ROSTENKOWSKI's District Office stating that they had found a closer place to store the van. [redacted] stated that he didn't charge ROSTENKOWSKI for the storage of the van, because he wasn't in the storage business, and didn't want to upset the Congressman. [redacted] stated

however, that a couple months later, his secretary received a telephone call from ROSTENKOWSKI's office, indicating that MC never billed ROSTENKOWSKI for the storage of the van. [redacted] stated that ROSTENKOWSKI was the first person to ever say that he wanted a bill, and [redacted] ignored the request.

Sometime later, [redacted] stated that he received a second request wherein an unknown individual from ROSTENKOWSKI's office indicated that ROSTENKOWSKI was required to pay for van storage. The unknown individual demanded that [redacted] send a bill to ROSTENKOWSKI, and advised that ROSTENKOWSKI normally was charged $100 per month for storage. It was not until [redacted] received the second request that [redacted] charged ROSTENKOWSKI between $500 and $600 for storage of the van. [redacted] stated that he received a check from ROSTENKOWSKI, but [redacted] could not recall the specific fund from which the check was drawn. [redacted] stated that the only thing he could recall about the check was that it was written off one of Congressman Rostenkowski's Funds. b6 b7C

[redacted] stated that he only billed ROSTENKOWSKI once, and after the five or six month period, [redacted] and/or MC never stored the van, or any other vehicle, for ROSTENKOWSKI. b6 b7C

[redacted] was asked if he had any records relating to the billing or storage of the van, and [redacted] indicated that their would only be one invoice for the storage, and he would need time to locate it because MC's offices were being renovated.

KOBYLINSKI stated that her husband ANTHONY KOBYLINSKI grew up in DAN ROSTENKOWSKI's neighborhood and knew ROSTENKOWSKI's father JOSEPH ROSTENKOWSKI. KOBYLINSKI also stated that she and ANTHONY KOBYLINSKI owned a grocery store located in the 32nd Ward at 1426 N. Paulina, Chicago, Illinois.

KOBYLINSKI stated that she only saw ROSTENKOWSKI at social functions (such as dinner dances) and the last time she saw ROSTENKOWSKI was at her husband's funeral. KOBYLINSKI stated that her husband died of cancer on 12/11/89, and prior to his death, worked for Chicago's Department of Health and Streets and Sanitation. KOBYLINSKI stated that her husband worked after hours and weekends as a volunteer Precinct Captain for 32nd Ward Alderman TERRY GABINSKI.

KOBYLINSKI stated that she handled the finances for the KOBYLINSKI family because her husband had Parkinson's disease and couldn't sign checks. KOBYLINSKI stated that she had no knowledge that her husband did any work for ROSTENKOWSKI and ever received money from ROSTENKOWSKI or GABINSKI. KOBYLINSKI also stated that she never did any work for ROSTENKOWSKI, and never volunteered her time for ROSTENKOWSKI or GABINSKI.

KOBYLINSKI stated that she had someone else do her federal income taxes, and always supplied the tax preparer with the W-2 Forms needed to complete the tax returns. KOBYLINSKI stated that she never received a W-2 Form from ROSTENKOWSKI or GABINSKI, and that she kept all of her past tax returns. KOBYLINSKI provided the interviewing Agents with a manila envelope containing all of her past tax returns which included tax returns for 1979 and 1980. KOBYLINSKI's federal tax return

EUGENE L. HOJNOWSKI, white male, date of birth 1/21/46, Social Security Account Number 358-38-9627, 3908 N. Hamilton, Chicago, Illinois, (312) 267-7124, was advised of the identity of the interviewing Agents and the purpose of the interview, and provided the following information:

HOJNOWSKI is currently employed by the City of Chicago, Department of Aviation, as a painter at O'Hare Airport, Chicago, Illinois. From October 1, 1969 to 1974 or 1975, HOJNOWSKI worked for 32nd Ward Alderman TERRY GABINSKI, doing secretarial work at approximately $8,300 per year.

HOJNOWSKI was asked if he had ever worked for Congressman DAN ROSTENKOWSKI, and HOJNOWSKI indicated that he worked for ROSTENKOWSKI a total of approximately twelve to eighteen months. HOJNOWSKI could not recall the specific dates he worked for ROSTENKOWSKI, but HOJNOWSKI indicated that he's sure he started working for ROSTENKOWSKI during the bicentennial year of 1976. HOJNOWSKI stated that he worked as an aide to ROSTENKOWSKI at the District Office located at 2148 N. Damen Avenue, Chicago, Illinois. HOJNOWSKI stated that, as an aid to ROSTENKOWSKI, he worked 40 hours per week and mainly did office work consisting of typing, filing, and research. HOJNOWSKI stated that he received approximately $9,500 per year as an aide to ROSTENKOWSKI, and received his salary in the form of monthly checks from the UNITED STATES TREASURY (UST).

HOJNOWSKI was asked if ROSTENKOWSKI ever asked for a kickback, or a portion of his paycheck, and HOJNOWSKI indicated that ROSTENKOWSKI never asked him for money. HOJNOWSKI also added that he knows of no one who had to take money out of their paycheck to pay ROSTENKOWSKI. HOJNOWSKI stated that the UST checks were in HOJNOWSKI's name, and he received them from [redacted] at the District Office. HOJNOWSKI stated that he deposited the UST checks at the MAIN BANK located on the corner of Western and Milwaukee Avenue, Chicago, Illinois, until 1978, when he switched banks. HOJNOWSKI could not recall the name of HOJNOWSKI also stated that the amounts shown on the sheet may be correct, but HOJNOWSKI could not recall the specific amounts.

HOJNOWSKI was asked if he could recall the last date he worked for ROSTENKOWSKI, and HOJNOWSKI reiterated that he started working for ROSTENKOWSKI in 1976, and only worked for ROSTENKOWSKI for twelve to eighteen months. HOJNOWSKI was asked if he may have worked for ROSTENKOWSKI in 1979, and HOJNOWSKI stated that he may have worked for ROSTENKOWSKI in 1979, but he was certain that he didn't work for ROSTENKOWSKI during or after 1980. HOJNOWSKI was asked a second time if their was any possibility that he may have done work for ROSTENKOWSKI after 1979, and HOJNOWSKI indicated that their was no doubt in his mind that after 1979, he never did any work for ROSTENKOWSKI.

HOJNOWSKI stated that from 1978 or 1979, to 1991, he went back to work for GABINSKI, as an administrative aid, and received about $36,000 per year. HOJNOWSKI was asked if he had done some work for ROSTENKOWSKI while being employed for GABINSKI, and HOJNOWSKI stated that he never worked for, or received a paycheck from, both GABINSKI and ROSTENKOWSKI. HOJNOWSKI stated that when he worked for GABINSKI, he never got a federal paycheck.

HOJNOWSKI stated that in 1985, 1989, and 1990, he was treated for alcohol and drug abuse. HOJNOWSKI was asked if his alcohol and drug abuse had any effect on his memory, and HOJNOWSKI stated that it had effected his ability to remember certain things, but that he was certain that he never received a paycheck from ROSTENKOWSKI while he was employed by GABINSKI. HOJNOWSKI was then asked a third time, if he may have worked for ROSTENKOWSKI after 1979, but couldn't remember it, and HOJNOWSKI stated that he was "sure of it", that after 1979 he never did any work for ROSTENKOWSKI.

STATEMENT OF TERMS AND CONDITIONS

INFORMATION PROVIDED

The enclosed report contains summary information from documents and instruments disclosed of public record in the records of the county within which the described real estate is located. This report includes either a Security Search, Master Search, or a Premier Search. These reports include the following information:

- Security Search — Summary information from recorded documents containing a legal description as of the date designated concerning ownership, mortgages, and other liens.
- Master Search — Summary information from recorded documents containing a legal description as of the date designated concerning ownership, mortgages, and other liens, a Tax Search* (5 years) and a Name Judgment and Lien Search.
- Premier Search — Summary information from recorded documents containing a legal description as of the date designated concerning ownership, mortgages, and other liens, a Tax Search* (5 years) and a Name Judgment and Lien Search, document recording and update of property report.

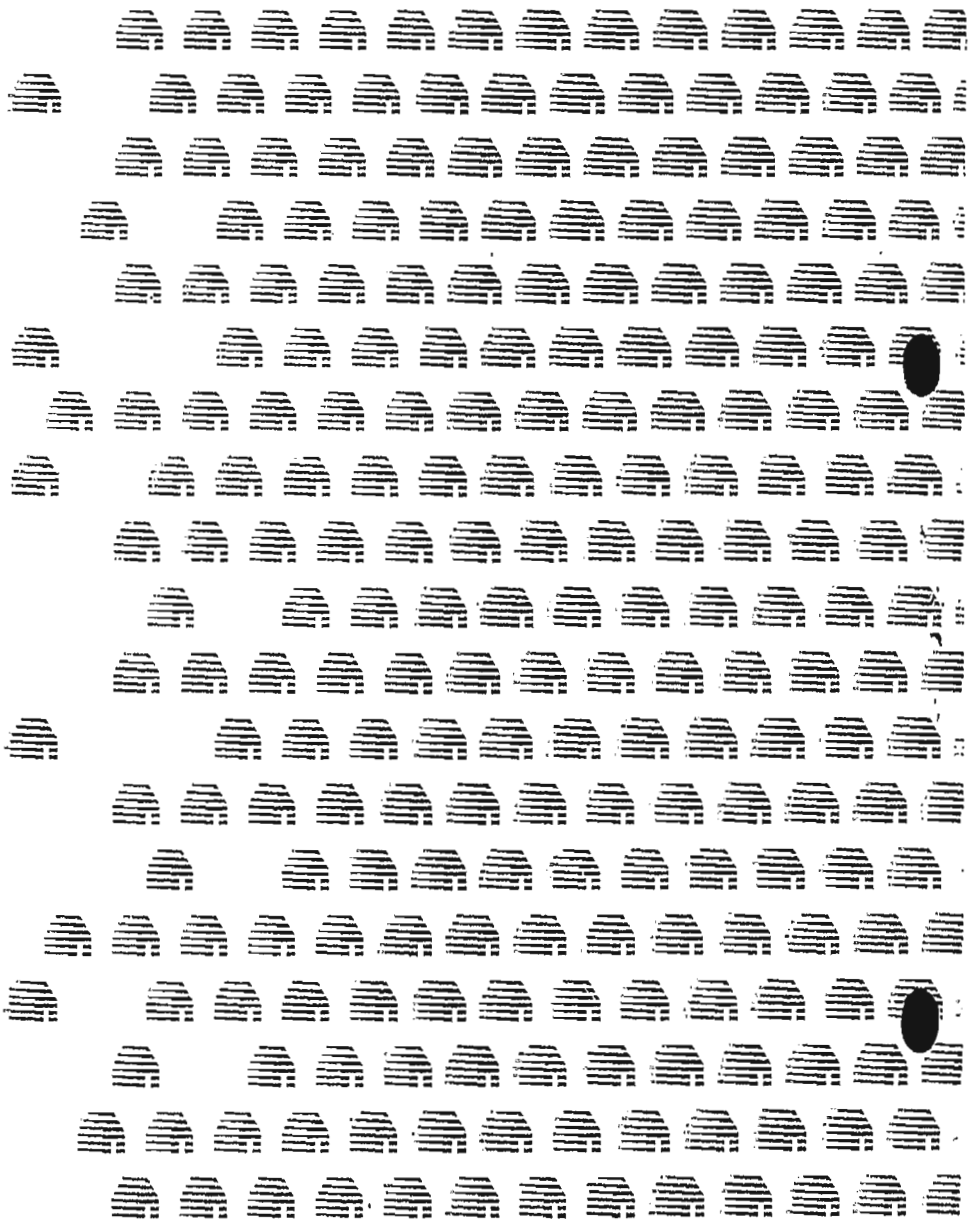
*Tax Search — Information from the records of the county Collector as of the date designated with respect to unpaid real estate taxes on the subject real estate.

Name Judgment and Lien Search — Summary information from public records of the county in which the real estate is situated as of the date designated with respect to judgments, decrees, notices of lien, debtors relief proceedings, divorces, mental disability proceedings or change of name proceedings relating to the name or names provided by the customer as the owner or owners of the subject real estate in the Search.

The Searches are not, and should not be construed as an opinion or guarantee concerning title to the subject real estate. The Search and the specific information contained therein, are summaries of information set forth in recorded documents or information in public records as of the date designated in each report; these reports do not include, and Real Estate Index, Inc. (the "Company") undertakes no responsibility to provide, any information unless set forth in a document recorded as of the designated date and accurately entered of record in the generally accepted reference source utilized by the respective county in which the property is located; or with respect to a Tax Search or Name Judgment and Lien Search, information set forth as a matter of public record as of the designated date in records of the county in which the subject real estate is situated. In the Name Judgment and Lien Search, the Search includes, and the undertaking of the Company is limited to, information from public records relating to the name or names provided to the Company by the customer as the owner of the subject property. Although the Company undertakes no obligation or responsibility to provide information with respect to persons other than those whose names are provided by the customer, the Search may include information with respect to additional persons or persons with similar names. The Search, and the reports, do not include information from the office of the Secretary of State of Illinois.

LIMITATION OF LIABILITY

The Searches contained herein are provided by the Company and accepted by the customer on the condition and agreement that:



a. With respect to any Search, the liability of the Company to the customer shall be limited to damage, cost, loss or expense of the customer not exceeding the sum, in the aggregate, of $50,000 arising out of an error in, or omission from the Search resulting from a negligent act, error or omission of the Company and the Company shall not be liable, and shall have no responsibility, for any damage, cost, loss or expense arising out of, or caused by, an error in, or omission from, a specific Search, whether caused by the negligence of the Company or its employees (i) in an amount in excess of $50,000, (ii) involving bodily injury, damage to property or emotional distress or (iii) involving any injury or damage to any person other than the customer, it being understood and agreed that this agreement is intended solely for the use and benefit of the Company and the customer and for no other person or entity, (iv) in any amount, when normal due diligence is not exercised. The Search is not intended to be, and should not be utilized as, a substitute for reasonable diligence of the customer in obtaining information provided by the parties, credit reports and investigation. Reliance, solely, on information provided by the Company is not appropriate if such information conflicts with information provided from other sources.

b. The Company undertakes no responsibility to provide information not set forth on recorded instruments or the public records of the county in which the subject real estate is situated as of the date designated and shall have no liability for the omission of such information from any report provided hereunder and further undertakes no responsibility or liability with respect to the accuracy or completeness of information set forth in recorded documents or other public records.

SUBJECT TO General real estate taxes for the year of 1961 and subsequent years.

TO HAVE AND TO HOLD the said premises with the appurtenances upon the trusts and for the uses and purposes herein and in said trust agreement set forth.

Full power and authority is hereby granted to and vested in said trustee to improve, manage, protect and subdivide said premises or any part thereof, to dedicate parks, streets, highways or alleys and to vacate any subdivision or part thereof, and to resubdivide said property as often as desired, to contract to sell, to grant options to purchase, to sell on any terms, to convey either with or without consideration, to donate, to dedicate, to mortgage, pledge or otherwise encumber said property or any part thereof, to lease said property, or any part thereof, from time to time, in possession or reversion, by leases to commence in praesenti or in futuro, and upon any terms and for any period or periods of time, not exceeding in the case of any single demise the term of 198 years, and to renew or extend leases upon any terms and for any period or periods of time and to amend, change or modify leases and the terms and provisions thereof at any time or times hereafter, to contract to make leases and to grant options to lease and options to renew leases and options to purchase the whole or any part of the reversion and to contract respecting the manner of fixing the amount of present or future rentals, to partition or to exchange said property, or any part thereof, for other real or personal property, to grant easements or charges of any kind, to release, convey or assign any right, title or interest in or about or easement appurtenant to said premises or any part thereof, and to deal with said property and any and every part thereof in all other ways and for such other considerations as it would be lawful for any person owning the same to deal with the same, whether similar to or different from the ways above specified, at any time or times hereafter. Any such power and authority granted to the Trustee shall not be exhausted by the use thereof, but may be exercised by it from time to time and as often as occasion may arise with respect to all or any part of the trust property.

In no case shall any person dealing with said trustee in relation to said premises, or to whom said premises or any part thereof shall be conveyed, contracted to be sold, leased or mortgaged by said trustee, be obliged to see to the application of any purchase money, rent or money borrowed or advanced on said premises, or be obliged to see that the terms of this trust and said trust agreement have been complied with, or be obliged to inquire into the necessity or expediency of any act of said trustee, or be obliged or privileged to inquire into any of the terms of said trust agreement; and every deed, trust deed, mortgage, lease or other kind of instrument executed by said trustee in relation to said real estate shall be conclusive evidence in favor of every person relying upon or claiming under any such conveyance, lease or other instrument, (a) that at the time of the delivery thereof the trust created by this Indenture and by said trust agreement was in full force and effect, (b) that such conveyance or other instrument was executed in accordance with the trusts, conditions and limitations contained in this Indenture and in said trust agreement or in some amendment thereof and binding upon all beneficiaries thereunder, (c) that said trustee was duly authorized and empowered to execute and deliver every such deed, trust deed, mortgage, lease or other instrument, and (d) if the conveyance is made by a successor or successors in trust, that such successor or successors in trust have been properly appointed and are fully vested with all the title, estate, rights, powers, authorities, duties and obligations of its, his or their predecessor in trust.

The interest of each and every beneficiary hereunder and of all persons claiming under them or any of them shall be only in the earnings, avails and proceeds arising from the sale or other disposition of said real estate, and such interest is hereby declared to be personal property, and no beneficiary hereunder shall have any title or interest, legal or equitable, in or to said real estate as such, but only an interest in the earnings, avails and proceeds thereof as aforesaid.

If the title to any of the above lands is now or hereafter registered, the Registrar of Titles is hereby directed not to register or note in the certificate of title or duplicate thereof, or memorial, the words "in trust," or "upon condition," or "with limitations," or words of similar import, in accordance with the statute in such case made and provided, and said Trustee shall not be required to produce the trust agreement or a copy thereof or any extracts therefrom, as evidence that any transfer, charge or other dealing involving the registered lands is in accordance with the true intent and meaning of the trust.

And the said grantor hereby release and waive all rights under and by virtue of the homestead exemption laws of the State of Illinois.

STATEMENT OF TERMS AND CONDITIONS

INFORMATION PROVIDED

The enclosed report contains summary information from documents and instruments disclosed of public record in the records of the county within which the described real estate is located. This report includes either a Security Search, Master Search, or a Premier Search. These reports include the following information:

- Security Search — Summary information from recorded documents containing a legal description as of the date designated concerning ownership, mortgages, and other liens.
- Master Search — Summary information from recorded documents containing a legal description as of the date designated concerning ownership, mortgages, and other liens, a Tax Search* (5 years) and a Name Judgment and Lien Search.
- Premier Search — Summary information from recorded documents containing a legal description as of the date designated concerning ownership, mortgages, and other liens, a Tax Search* (5 years) and a Name Judgment and Lien Search, document recording and update of property report.

*Tax Search — Information from the records of the county Collector as of the date designated with respect to unpaid real estate taxes on the subject real estate.
Name Judgment and Lien Search — Summary information from public records of the county in which the real estate is situated as of the date designated with respect to judgments, decrees, notices of lien, debtors relief proceedings, divorces, mental disability proceedings or change of name proceedings relating to the name or names provided by the customer as the owner or owners of the subject real estate in the Search.

The Searches are not, and should not be construed as an opinion or guarantee concerning title to the subject real estate. The Search and the specific information contained therein, are summaries of information set forth in recorded documents or information in public records as of the date designated in each report; these reports do not include, and Real Estate Index, Inc. (the "Company") undertakes no responsibility to provide, any information unless set forth in a document recorded as of the designated date and accurately entered of record in the generally accepted reference source utilized by the respective county in which the property is located; or with respect to a Tax Search or Name Judgment and Lien Search, information set forth as a matter of public record as of the designated date in records of the county in which the subject real estate is situated. In the Name Judgment and Lien Search, the Search includes, and the undertaking of the Company is limited to, information from public records relating to the name or names provided to the Company by the customer as the owner of the subject property. Although the Company undertakes no obligation or responsibility to provide information with respect to persons other than those whose names are provided by the customer, the Search may include information with respect to additional persons or persons with similar names. The Search, and the reports, do not include information from the office of the Secretary of State of Illinois.

a. With respect to any Search, the liability of the Company to the customer shall be limited to damage, cost, loss or expense of the customer not exceeding the sum, in the aggregate, of $50,000 arising out of an error in, or omission from the Search resulting from a negligent act, error or omission of the Company and the Company shall not be liable, and shall have no responsibility, for any damage, cost, loss or expense arising out of, or caused by, an error in, or omission from, a specific Search, whether caused by the negligence of the Company or its employees (i) in an amount in excess of $50,000, (ii) involving bodily injury, damage to property or emotional distress or (iii) involving any injury or damage to any person other than the customer, it being understood and agreed that this agreement is intended solely for the use and benefit of the Company and the customer and for no other person or entity, (iv) in any amount, when normal due diligence is not exercised. The Search is not intended to be, and should not be utilized as, a substitute for reasonable diligence of the customer in obtaining information provided by the parties, credit reports and investigation. Reliance, solely, on information provided by the Company is not appropriate if such information conflicts with information provided from other sources.

b. The Company undertakes no responsibility to provide information not set forth on recorded instruments or the public records of the county in which the subject real estate is situated as of the date designated and shall have no liability for the omission of such information from any report provided hereunder and further undertakes no responsibility or liability with respect to the accuracy or completeness of information set forth in recorded documents or other public records.

Re: WMFO telecalls of 12/16/93 to SSA [redacted] of San Francisco, Oakland RA, and SA [redacted] of Los Angeles, Palm Springs RA.

Enclosed for Los Angles and San Francisco are one Federal Grand Jury subpoena each and copies of various documents supporting the lead set out on this communication.

For the information of Los Angeles and San Francisco, PLATE BLOCK is the code name of the case commonly referred to as the House Post Office Investigation and includes as a subject Rep. DAN ROSTENKOWSKI of Illinois.

Investigation conducted into this matter has developed information that ROSTENKOWSKI has converted considerable amounts of U.S. funds for his own personal use through purchases made on his behalf by the U.S. House of Representatives Office Supply Service. Numerous purchases were made for ROSTENKOWSKI by the Supply Service since 1988 which include Lenox china, Boyt luggage, fine crystal and gold jewelry. ROSTENKOWSKI did not reimburse the Supply Service for these purchases which, in general, he had shipped to his District Office in Chicago. Rather, ROSTENKOWSKI charged these personal purchases to his account which is intended to be utilized for official office supply expenses.

Generally, all of these purchases were handled in the same manner. ROSTENKOWSKI would instruct a member of his personal staff to contact the Supply Service to purchase a particular item. The Supply Service would then contact the manufacturer or distributor of the item and issue a special purchase authorization to the vendor. In almost all of the instances, the Supply Service would be told to instruct the vendor to ship the goods to ROSTENKOWSKI's District Office located at 2148 N. Damen St. in Chicago. The Supply Service would then authorize the House Finance Office to issue a U.S. Treasury check to the vendor in payment for the items. This usage of the Supply Service is available to other Members of the House, but the Member is expected to provide payment, including a 10% service fee, to the Supply Service from his of her personal funds for non-official items purchased.

Investigation conducted into these allegations has developed information that ROSTENKOWSKI has, in addition to the aforementioned items, have been provided to receiving offices. Investigating Agents should be aware of that there is a possibility that ROSTENKOWSKI may have previously contacted these individuals regarding this subject and they may refuse to be interviewed.

If these people are cooperative, investigating Agents should pursue all logical questioning regarding this matter including, but not limited, to the following:

1. Complete background information regarding their relationship with ROSTENKOWSKI.

2. All discussions and correspondence regarding the subject of these chairs with ROSTENKOWSKI including why these individuals came to receive these chairs from ROSTENKOWSKI.

3. When and how the chairs were received.

4. Did these individuals provide any reimbursement, monetary or otherwise, to the Supply Service or ROSTENKOWSKI for these chairs.

5. The current status of the chairs including condition and location.

Questions regarding this matter may be forwarded to SA [redacted], Squad C-9, Northern Virginia Metropolitan Resident Agency, (202) 324-6294. b6 b7C

[redacted] day telephone number [redacted], night telephone number [redacted] was interviewed at [redacted] concerning ROBERT and IRENE RUSSO and their relationship with United States House of Representative DAN ROSTENKOWSKI. At the outset of the interview, she was advised of the identities of the interviewing agents and the purpose of the interview. Thereafter, she advised as follows:

During the daytime she takes care of an elderly male who lives at [redacted] who suffers from Alzheimer's disease. Because she is at [redacted] during the day, she is acquainted with the RUSSOS who live across the street at 119 Park Avenue. She speaks with IRENE RUSSO on a regular basis as IRENE visits her at the [redacted] residence. About one or one and a half months ago, IRENE RUSSO, whom [redacted] b6 b7C believes suffers from high blood pressure, visited her and "bummed a cigarette." It was at this time that IRENE told [redacted] for the first time that the RUSSOS had worked for Congressman ROSTENKOWSKI and that people were talking to her about this. She told [redacted] that she did not know what they wanted with her because in her words she was only a "peon" as it concerned her employment with ROSTENKOWSKI, the same as the "gardener and the cook." IRENE RUSSO never told [redacted] what she did for the ROSTENKOWSKIS and [redacted] thought it might have been housecleaning as she knew RUSSO had done that in the past. During this conversation, IRENE appeared very nervous. [redacted] knew there was some kind of a court proceeding going on at this time and when the RUSSOS were gone for a few days she thought that was the reason.

[redacted] believes she has only had two conversations with IRENE concerning RUSSO's employment with ROSTENKOWSKI and knows nothing more than what RUSSO told her during these conversations.

THIS INDENTURE WITNESSETH, That the Grantor

JOSEPH P. ROSTENKOWSKI, a Widower & not since remarried of the County of Cook and State of Illinois for and in consideration of TEN AND NO/100---------($10.00)----------Dollars, and other good and valuable considerations in hand paid, Convey and warrant unto THE DROVERS NATIONAL BANK of CHICAGO, a National banking association (successor by merger to Drovers Trust and Savings Bank), Trustee under the provisions of a trust agreement dated the 24th day of November 1964, known as Trust Number 64025, the following described real estate in the County of Cook and State of Illinois, to-wit:

Lot 6 (except the East 1-5/8 inches) in Block 4, Winslow Jacobson and Talimadis subdivision of the Northeast quarter of the Northeast quarter of Section 1, Township 39 North, Range 13 East of the Third Principal Meridian, in Cook County, Illinois.

Consideration less than $100.00

TO HAVE AND TO HOLD the said premises with the appurtenances upon the trusts and for the uses and purposes herein and in said trust agreement set forth.

Full power and authority is hereby granted to said trustee to improve, manage, protect and subdivide said premises or any part thereof, to dedicate parks, streets, highways or alleys and to vacate any subdivision or part thereof, and to resubdivide said property as often as desired, to contract to sell, to grant options to purchase, to sell on any terms, to convey either with or without consideration, to convey said premises or any part thereof to a successor or successors in trust and to grant to such successor or successors in trust all of the title, estate, powers and authorities vested in said trustee, to donate, to dedicate, to mortgage, pledge or otherwise encumber said property, or any part thereof, to lease said property, or any part thereof, from time to time in possession or reversion, by leases to commence in presenti or in futuro, and upon any terms and for any period or periods of time, not exceeding in the case of any single demise the term of 198 years, and to renew or extend leases upon any terms and for any period or periods of time and to amend, change or modify leases and the terms and provisions thereof at any time or times hereafter, to contract to make leases and to grant options to lease and options to renew leases and options to purchase the whole or any part of the reversion and to contract respecting the manner of fixing the amount of present or future rentals, to partition or to exchange said property, or any part thereof, for other real or personal property, to grant easements or charges of any kind, to release, convey or assign any right, title or interest in or about or easement appurtenant to said premises or any part thereof, and to deal with said property and every part thereof in all other ways and for such other considerations as it would be lawful for any person owning the same to deal with the same, whether similar to or different from the ways above specified, at any time or times hereafter.

In no case shall any party dealing with said trustee in relation to said premises, or to whom said premises or any part thereof shall be conveyed, contracted to be sold, leased or mortgaged by said trustee, be obliged to see to the application of any purchase money, rent, or money borrowed or advanced on said premises, or be obliged to see that the terms of this trust have been complied with, or be obliged to inquire into the necessity or expediency of any act of said trustee, or be obliged or privileged to inquire into any of the terms of said trust agreement; and every deed, trust deed, mortgage, lease or other instrument executed by said trustee in relation to said real estate shall be conclusive evidence in favor of every person relying upon or claiming under any such conveyance, lease or other instrument, (a) that at the time of the delivery thereof the trust created by this indenture and by said trust agreement was in full force and effect, (b) that such conveyance or other instrument was executed in accordance with the trusts, conditions and limitations contained in this indenture and in said trust agreement or in some amendment thereof and binding upon all beneficiaries thereunder, (c) that said trustee was duly authorized and empowered to execute and deliver every such deed, trust deed, lease, mortgage, other instrument and (d) if the conveyance is made to a successor or successors in trust, that such successor or successors in trust have been properly appointed and are fully vested with all the title, estate, rights, powers, authorities, duties and obligations of its, his or their predecessor in trust.

The interest of each and every beneficiary hereunder and of all persons claiming under them or any of them shall be only in the earnings, avails and proceeds arising from the sale or other disposition of said real estate, and such interest is hereby declared to be personal property, and no beneficiary hereunder shall have any title or interest, legal or equitable, in or to said real estate as such, but only an interest in the earnings, avails and proceeds thereof as aforesaid.

If the title to any of the above lands is now or hereafter registered, the Registrar of Titles is hereby directed not to register or note in the certificate of title or duplicate thereof, or memorial, the words "in trust" or "upon condition", or "with limitations", or words of similar import, in accordance with the statute in such case made and provided.

And the said grantor hereby expressly waive S and release S any and all right or benefit under and by virtue of any and all statutes of the State of Illinois, providing for the exemption of homesteads from sale on execution or otherwise.

In Witness Whereof, the grantor aforesaid ha S hereunto set his hand and seal this 24th day of November 19 64

SANDRA H. SMITH, date of birth 6/5/42, Social Security number 324-34-9102, CAMCO Building Manager, EUGENIE TERRACE, 1730 N. Clark Street, 2nd Floor, Chicago, Illinois, (312)787-3335, was advised of the identities of the interviewing Agents and the purpose of the interview, and provided the following information:

SMITH has worked for CAMCO, 1201 N. Clark Street, Chicago, Illinois, for ten and a-half years. Starting in 1985, SMITH managed a senior citizen apartment complex for CAMCO identified as WALSH PARK, 1734 N. Paulina, Chicago, Illinois. Sometime after 1985, (SMITH could not recall the date) SMITH started managing an additional senior citizen apartment complex named FULLERTON COURT, 2303 N. Clybourn, Chicago, Illinois.

SMITH became acquainted with [redacted] while [redacted] worked part-time driving senior citizens to and from a grocery store and WALSH PARK. SMITH stated that, to the best of her recollection, [redacted] began driving the senior citizens for 32nd Ward Alderman TERRY GABINSKI, but SMITH has no idea who paid [redacted] for her services. SMITH stated that, sometime after [redacted] began driving the senior citizens, SMITH hired [redacted] to work as an assistant in the FULLERTON COURT complex. SMITH could not recall the month or year [redacted] was hired. SMITH stated that while [redacted] was employed by CAMCO, [redacted] continued to transport the senior citizens, but SMITH has no idea how much [redacted] was paid by CAMCO for the chauffeuring service. SMITH stated that [redacted] drove the senior citizens to the grocery store once or twice a week from both WALSH PARK and FULLERTON COURT. b6 b7C

SMITH could not recall who started the program of driving the senior citizens to the grocery store. Nonetheless, SMITH stated that GABINSKI was probably the individual who got the program started, because GABINSKI was always concerned about the senior citizens in his Ward. SMITH stated that WALSH PARK and FULLERTON COURT are located in the 32nd Ward, but SMITH has no recollection of meeting GABINSKI to discuss the new program.

The purpose of this memo is to request the assistance of support personnel in the captioned matter.

On 1/4/94, the FBI Photography Laboratory completed a job which involved producing two sets of 4 x 6 inch photos from negatives subpoenaed in this case. This project produced a total of approximately 25,500 photographs which now need to be separated into two matched sets. One of these sets will be provided to the Federal Grand Jury hearing this matter, and the other set will be provided to the Chicago Division. Chicago will be working with the photographer to identify key individuals in these photos.

Support assistance is requested to help separate these photographs into two sets. It is estimated that this project will take 26 man-hours to complete.

[redacted] has known REPRESENTATIVE DAN ROSTENKOWSKI since 1978. According to [redacted] he met ROSTENKOWSKI shortly after moving to Chicago in 1978. [redacted] resided in Chicago for ten years and during that time became good friends with ROSTENKOWSKI. Over the years they have remained friends and socialized together. On numerous occaisions they have played golf together. [redacted] related that he has never contributed to ROSTENKOWSKI's campaign efforts.

Since 1978 [redacted] has received a variety of gifts from ROSTENKOWSKI. He has received calenders, golf shirts, gourmet popcorn and a black chair in the past. [redacted] stated that he received the black chair from ROSTENKOWSKI in December of 1990. He believed it to be a Christmas gift. [redacted] related that he possesses no written communication between he and ROSTENKOWSKI relating to the chair. b6 b7C

[redacted] keeps the chair in the reception area of his office. He permitted the interviewing agent to inspect it. An examination of the chair revealed a painting of the Capitol of the United States on the back support portion of the chair. Inscribed in gold colored paint on the back of the chair are the words: b6 b7C

Subject: PERSONNEL MATTER

On 1/4/94, the Photographic Laboratory of FBI Headquarters completed an extremely large photo production project relating to the "PLATE BLOCK" investigation (58C-WF-180673) (C-9). This project, which proved to be the second largest photo production project in the history of the Photo Lab, yielded a total of 25,500 photographs which were printed from negatives which were subpoenaed in the aforementioned matter.

It was necessary that Lab make two copies of each of the photos which were printed from the subpoened negatives. Due to the manner in which the Lab performed this task, the two sets of prints were not provided in separate sets. The duplicate photos were provided consecutively, grouped and labeled according to the particular batch of negatives which was printed.

As the United States Attorneys Office for the District of Columbia needed these photos for the purpose of providing them to the Federal Grand Jury hearing this case, there became an urgent need to separate these photos and create two complete, accurately labeled sets of photographs, one to be provided to the Grand Jury and the other to be retained in FBI evidence.

A request was made to FS [redacted] on 1/4/95 for assistance in this matter. FS [redacted] expeditiously organized a support team to deal with this task which began working on this project the next morning. This team, which consisted of IMA [redacted] ECT [redacted] FC [redacted] FC [redacted] FC [redacted] and FC [redacted] worked b6 b7C throughout the day and into that evening to complete this extensive and very tedious project. As a result of the efforts of these individuals, these photographs were provided to the prosecution team in a timely manner and Grand Jury process in this highly sensitive matter was not delayed.

The personnel who assisted in this project deserve recognition for the substantial contribution that they have made in this case.

A COPY OF THIS COMMUNICATION IS PROVIDED TO THE BUREAU AS SOME OF THE INDIVIDUALS TO BE INTERVIEWED ARE PROMINENT WITHIN THE CITY OF CHICAGO AND MANY HOLD PUBLIC OFFICE IN THE LOCAL AND STATE COMMUNITY. MOST ARE BELIEVED TO BE CLOSELY ALIGNED WITH AND SYMPATHETIC TOWARDS ROSTENKOWSKI, AND IT IS ANTICIPATED THAT CONTACT WITH THESE INDIVIDUALS COULD GENERATE PUBLICITY. IT IS NOTED THAT ALL OF THE INDIVIDUALS IDENTIFIED ARE CONSIDERED TO BE WITNESSES AND THE U.S. ATTORNEY'S OFFICE HAS NO INTENTION OF PURSUING ANY OF THEM AS SUBJECTS OF THIS INVESTIGATION. THERE IS NO INFORMATION AVAILABLE WHICH EVEN SUGGESTS THAT ANY OF THESE INDIVIDUALS ACCEPTED GIFTS FROM ROSTENKOWSKI WHICH WERE KNOWN TO HAVE BEEN OBTAINED BY ROSTENKOWSKI THROUGH ILLEGAL MEANS. THE PURPOSE OF EACH INTERVIEW IS TO SIMPLY IDENTIFY THE GIFTS RECEIVED AND CIRCUMSTANCES SURROUNDING THE RECEIPT OF THE GIFTS. THE U.S. ATTORNEY'S OFFICE IS PREPARED TO ISSUE SUBPOENAS FOR TESTIMONY BEFORE THE GRAND JURY HEARING THIS MATTER WHICH WILL BE PROVIDED BY SEPARATE COMMUNICATION.

by SA [redacted] TJB:tb Date dictated 2/15/94

This document contains neither recommendations nor conclusions of the FBI. It is the property of the FBI and is loaned to your agency;

[redacted] recalled that, prior to receiving the chair, he was at one of ROSTENKOWSKI's offices when ROSTENKOWSKI showed him a chair and asked him if he liked it. ROSENBERG stated that it was at that time he realized that he would be receiving a chair. ROSENBERG could not recall the specific date he received the chair, but stated that it arrived at his office (which was then located at 1122 N. LaSalle, Chicago, Illinois) between the unveiling of ROSTENKOWSKI's Ways and Means Committee portrait and 1991. b6 b7C

[redacted] stated that the crystal replica of the U.S. Capitol was delivered to his office at [redacted] stated that he obtained the crystal replica within the last two years and kept it on his desk in his office. b6 b7C

[redacted] did not know who delivered the chair or the crystal replica because both items were dropped off at the front desk of his office space. [redacted] did not know if the items were mailed to his office, but [redacted] stated that it was ROSTENKOWSKI's style to have items hand carried to their recipients. [redacted] advised that a card or note probably accompanied each item, but [redacted] kept neither the cards nor the notes. [redacted] never paid ROSTENKOWSKI for the chair or crystal replica, and never considered reimbursing ROSTENKOWSKI because he considered the items gifts from a friend. [redacted] indicated that it is possible that he may have received additional gifts from ROSTENKOWSKI in the past, but [redacted] has no recollection of receiving any additional gifts. b6 b7C

[redacted] was asked if photographs of the chair and crystal replica could be taken, and [redacted] indicated that he would have both items brought to the conference room for photographs. The items were brought to the conference room, and the interviewing Agent took photos of both items. b6 b7C

[redacted] said that TROJAN DEVELOPMENT was one of the partners that developed the MORNINGSIDE COUNTRY CLUB in Rancho Mirage. In addition to developing the real estate at MORNINGSIDE, [redacted] was also the [redacted] of the Board of Governors of THE CLUB AT MORNINGSIDE which is the golf course and held this position until July of 1992. [redacted] said that in January of 1992 the All American Collegian Scholarship Tournament was held at THE CLUB AT MORNINGSIDE. This is a charity golf tournament to raise money for college students to attend universities on golf scholarships and has been in existence for many years. The tournament is attended by celebrities and professional golfers who have benefitted from the scholarship fund and the tournament is held one day before the BOB HOPE DESERT CLASSIC.

[redacted] said one of the individuals playing at the tournament in January of 1992 was representative DAN ROSTENKOWSKI of the United States Congress. [redacted] this was the first and only time he met Representative ROSTENKOWSKI. After the tournament there is a banquet at the clubhouse and the celebrities, honored guests and professional golfers are honored and awards are presented. Prior to the start of these activities, [redacted] the HILTON HOTEL chain, suggested to [redacted] that ROSTENKOWSKI be made an honorary member of THE CLUB AT MORNINGSIDE. [redacted] said the by-laws of the club allow for twenty honorary members and they included at the time former President FORD, BOB HOPE, Former Ambassador ANNENBERG and Former Ambassador FIRESTONE among others. [redacted] said that they had several openings for honorary membership and he believes that Representative ROSTENKOWSKI would qualify as a honorary member b6 b7C because he was a well known dignitary and public figure. [redacted] b6 b7C said he personally gave the honorary membership to ROSTENKOWSKI that evening along with sports columnist BILL MURRAY of the Los Angeles Times. [redacted] said that ROSTENKOWSKI stated he was personally touched and honored to be selected as an honorary member.

[redacted] said that several months later he received a crystal model of the capital from Representative ROSTENKOWSKI as a token of his appreciation. [redacted] said he keeps the sculpture at his home in [redacted] [redacted] said as far as he knows ROSTENKOWSKI has never been back to the club at MORNINGSIDE to play golf even though he is an honorary member. [redacted] said that honorary memberships are non-propriety, non-voting, non-transferable, not-assignable and shall terminate in accordance with the terms under which each membership is granted or upon the death of each such honorary member. Honorary members are not obligated to pay membership fees or dues and may or may not in the discretion of the club be obliged to pay for charges for individual services furnished to them and their guests in the same manner as other members of the club. [redacted] said that very few of the honorary members ever take advantage of the facilities at THE CLUB AT MORNINGSIDE. [redacted] said that a regular membership during 1992 would cost $60,000.00 and the monthly dues were $550.00.

[redacted] was shown a copy of a note which thanked Rep. DAN ROSTENKOWSKI for place settings of china. [redacted] examined the copy and advised the interviewing Agent that the writing in the note was her own, although she did not specifically recall writing the note. [redacted] advised that she was sure, however, that this particular note was in response to receiving at least one place setting, or more probably two place settings of china at the occasion of her wedding to her husband, [redacted] advised that she owns 15 place settings of Lenox Royal Peony pattern china, all of which was received for gifts at her wedding.

[redacted] further advised that she had no specific recollection of receiving any china whatsoever from ROSTENKOWSKI, although the note she was shown prompted her to state that she must have or she would not have written the note thanking the Congressman for it. [redacted] advised that all 435 members of the House of Representatives were invited to he wedding at [redacted] insistence, although only two or three Members actually came. [redacted] did recall, however, that ROSTENKOWSKI did not attend the wedding ceremony.

[redacted] advised that she was unsure exactly how she received the china, as gifts were received at the wedding and at [redacted] and other individuals assisted with the presents. Other than the thank-you note copy which she was shown by the investigating Agent, she was aware of no other correspondence or communication of any kind with ROSTENKOWSKI regarding this gift of china,

SUBJECT : PLATE BLOCK

Enclosed with this communication is one Federal Grand Jury subpoena.

For the information of the Philadelphia Division, Plate Block is the code name of the investigation which includes, among others, Rep. DAN ROSTENKOWSKI of Illinois.

Investigation into this matter currently includes purchases made by ROSTENKOWSKI at the U.S. House of Representatives Office Supply Store (OSS) in Washington, D.C. These purchases under investigation are items obtained from the OSS, allegedly for official use, which actually were personal items that were kept by ROSTENKOWSKI or given by him as gifts to other individuals. These items were paid for by U.S. Treasury funds and include decorative, inscribed House of Representatives chairs, crystal sculptures of miniature U.S. Capitols, fine dining china, expensive luggage and glassware. ROSTENKOWSKI purchased in excess of $50,000 in goods from the OSS for himself or as gifts.

The United States Attorney for the District of Columbia (USA) has requested that an attempt be made to locate as many of these gift items as possible and that the recipients of the gifts be interviewed as to the circumstances of their receipt of these gifts. The USA has also requested that these interviews be conducted as soon as possible.

Investigation into this matter has developed numerous names of persons who are close friends and associates of ROSTENKOWSKI. Interviews conducted, to date, have had a high level of success in locating these gift items. The person associated with this particular lead, [redacted] ROSTENKOWSKI's and is believed to still be a close friend of the Congressman. It is anticipated that, although no specific information exists that [redacted] received any of the aforementioned gifts from ROSTENKOWSKI, an interview with this individual will also locate additional gift items purchased through the OSS. b6 b7C

It is requested that [redacted] be located and thoroughly interviewed regarding his past and current relationship with ROSTENKOWSKI. The address provided to Philadelphia is the most recent available address for [redacted]. Should [redacted] have received one or more of the aforementioned items, all details of why he received the gift as well as how and when the gift was received should be obtained. All correspondence regarding these gifts, if available, should also be obtained. All substantial items, other than calendars or other inconsequential items given to [redacted] by ROSTENKOWSKI's Congressional office, should be photographed. b6 b7C

Additionally, the enclosed subpoena which calls for the production of certain items should be served on [redacted] Generally, all items except the Congressional chairs should be obtained, a receipt should be provided and the items entered into evidence. Should this interview locate one of the [redacted] this item should be obtained and forwarded to OO. It is anticipated that any items obtained from [redacted] will eventually be returned. If items are discovered which are not the aforementioned items, OO should be notified as to the nature of the gifts and instructions will be provided as to whether these items should be receipted and taken into evidence. b3

TO : SAC, LAS VEGAS

FROM : ADIC, WMFO (58C-WF-180673) (P) (C-9)

SUBJECT : PLATE BLOCK
OO:WF

Enclosed for receiving offices are Federal Grand Jury subpoenas pertaining to the leads set out in this communication.

For the information of Las Vegas, Salt Lake City and San Diego, Plate Block is the code name of the investigation which includes, among others, Rep. DAN ROSTENKOWSKI of Illinois.

Investigation into this matter currently includes purchases made by ROSTENKOWSKI at the U.S. House of Representatives Office Supply Store (OSS) in Washington, D.C. These purchases under investigation are items obtained from the OSS, allegedly for official use, which actually were personal items that were kept by ROSTENKOWSKI or given by him as gifts to other individuals. These items were paid for by U.S. Treasury funds and include decorative, inscribed House of Representatives chairs, crystal sculptures of miniature U.S.

Capitols, fine dining china, expensive luggage, glassware and other items. ROSTENKOWSKI purchased in excess of $50,000 in goods from the OSS for himself or as gifts.

The United States Attorney for the District of Columbia (USA) has requested that an attempt be made to locate as many of these gift items as possible and that the recipients of the gifts be interviewed as to the circumstances of their receipt of these gifts. The USA has also requested that these interviews be conducted as soon as possible.

Investigation into this matter has developed numerous names of persons who are close friends and associates of ROSTENKOWSKI. Interviews conducted, to date, have had a high level of success in locating these gift items. The names associated with this particular lead are persons who have hosted or sponsored ROSTENKOWSKI fundraisers, receptions or other political events that benefitted ROSTENKOWSKI. It is anticipated that, although no specific information exists that these persons received any of the aforementioned gifts from ROSTENKOWSKI, these interviews will also locate additional gift items purchased through the OSS.

It is requested that these people be located and thoroughly interviewed regarding their receiving the aforementioned items or any other items from ROSTENKOWSKI. The addresses provided to receiving offices are the most recent available employment addresses of these persons. These individuals should be interviewed regarding their relationship with ROSTENKOWSKI and should the person have received one or more of the aforementioned items, all details of why they received the gift as well as how and when the gift was received should be obtained. All correspondence regarding these gifts, if available, should also be obtained. All substantial items, other than calendars or other inconsequential items, should be photographed.

Additionally, the enclosed subpoenas which call for the production of certain items should be served on the individuals. Generally, all items except the congressional chairs should be obtained from the individual, receipts provided, entered into evidence and returned to OO. It is anticipated that these items obtained will eventually be returned. If items are discovered which are not the aforementioned items, OO should be notified as to the nature of the gifts and instructions will be provided as to whether these items should be receipted and taken into evidence.

It is requested that the following individuals be interviewed regarding this matter. Questions regarding this matter may be referred to SA [redacted] Northern

ROBERT PRESSMAN, 1240 North Lake Shore Drive, Chicago, Illinois, Date of Birth 6/4/27, was interviewed at his place of employment, ILLINOIS WHOLESALE LIQUOR DEALERS ASSOCIATION, 188 West Randolph, Suite 1807, Chicago, Illinois, (312)346-9525, and provided the following information:

PRESSMAN has known DAN ROSTENKOWSKI for approximately twenty-five years. Their relationship is a personal one that began when they both owned vacation homes in a small community in Wisconsin. Their wives were also friends and PRESSMAN's daughter babysat for ROSTENKOWSKI'S children on occasion.

Through the years PRESSMAN has received a variety of gifts from ROSTENKOWSKI. Most of these gifts have been commemorative items signifying an event or occasion in ROSTENKOWSKI's career. These include a commemorative book on ROSTENKOWSKI'S life that was issued when he became Chairman of the House of Representatives Ways and Means Committee. PRESSMAN also recived a book on the U.S. Congress. PRESSMAN remembers receiving a pair of cufflinks that commemorated some occasion, but he believes he lost these. PRESSMAN may have also received a commemorative plate, but he does not recall for what occasion or if he still has it. PRESSMAN never received a chair from ROSTENKOWSKI.

All of the items that PRESSMAN received from ROSTENKOWSKI were given to him as gifts and he never reimbursed ROSTENKOWSKI for the items nor was he asked to pay for them. He believes that all of the items were mailed to him and each was probably accompanied by a card or letter.

On February 9, 1994, ARNOLD J. MORTON, 2445 Woodbridge Lane, Highland Park, Illinois, telephone number (708) 432-6222 was interviewed at 1030 North State Street, Chicago, Illinois by Special Agent (SA) [redacted] After being advised of the identity of the interviewing agent and the purpose for the interview, MORTON provided the following information: b6 b7C

MORTON advised that he maintains no relationship with United States Congressman, DANIEL ROSTENKOWSKI and the only thing of value that he has ever received from the Congressman was a gift set containing HELEN CURTIS products for women. MORTON stated that he has not received any decorative chairs, crystal sculptures, fine china or expensive luggage from Congressman ROSTENKOWSKI.

MORTON explained that in approximately 1992, his former restaurant, ARNIE MORTONS, was the setting for a fund raiser for Congressman ROSTENKOWSKI hosted by the CHICAGO ILLINOIS RESTAURANT ASSOCIATION (CIRA) which he is a member. MORTON explained that after it was proposed that the federal tax deduction for entertainment expenses be reduced from 80% to 50%, a group of restaurant owners, who were also members of CIRA, decided to host a fund raiser for Congressman ROSTENKOWSKI to voice their opposition to the reduction. His restaurant, ARNIE MORTONS, was selected as the cite for the event.

After being advised of the interview and the nature of the interviewing agent, JOYCE provided the following information:

JOYCE stated that he has known Representative DAN ROSTENKOWSKI for approximately 35 years. JOYCE first met ROSTENKOWSKI at a local Ward meeting while he was employed as a truck driver for a local company and ROSTENKOWSKI was a freshman Congressman.

JOYCE expressed that he had never received any thing of value from ROSTENKOWSKI. JOYCE volunteered that he received a card or a letter from time to time, but that he could never remember receiving a chair, china, crystal replicas of the Capital or anything else which might be of value. When asked, JOYCE recounted that he did receive some calendars from ROSTENKOWSKI, but he added that most were just thrown away.

JOYCE has only known ROSTENKOWSKI socially and has never worked with him or for him. JOYCE also stated that he had never lived in the same WARD as ROSTENKOWSKI.

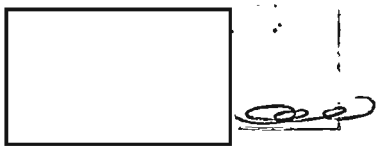
Regarding the chair, LYONS advised that during the 1992 Christmas season, he received a telephone call from [redacted] at which time she advised that she was in possession of a chair that Congressman ROSTENKOWSKI wanted to be given to LYONS. [redacted] asked LYONS where she should send it. LYONS directed [redacted] to send the chair to the 45th Ward Headquarters. LYONS subsequently received the chair a short time later. LYONS could not recall if a card or letter was attached and did not recall sending a thank you letter to ROSTENKOWSKI. LYONS recalled that he verbally thanked ROSTENKOWSKI. b6 b7C

Regarding the beer mugs, LYONS recalled that he attended a golf outing dinner sponsored by ROSTENKOWSKI during the summer of 1993 and the glasses were being given out to everyone who attended. [redacted] noted that it is common for gifts purchased with campaign funds to be given out to campaign supporters.



Regarding the lucite shield, LYONS recalled that he received it approximately five years ago as a Christmas gift. LYONS could not recall any other circumstances surrounding this gift.

LYONS advised that he neither reimbursed ROSTENKOWSKI for the above gifts nor was he asked by ROSTENKOWSKI to pay for the gifts. LYONS further advised that neither he nor any members of his family received any other gifts from ROSTENKOWSKI.

LYONS advised that [redacted] worked for ROSTENKOWSKI as an intern during the summer of 1987 or 1988 in Washington, D.C. prior to graduating from law school. b6 b7C

DUNNE has known U.S. REPRESENTATIVE DANIEL ROSTENKOWSKI for over 50 years. DUNNE first became acquainted with ROSTENKOWSKI when both men were elected to the Illinois State Legislature. DUNNE stated that he considered ROSTENKOWSKI to be a close friend. DUNNE knew ROSTENKOWSKI's father, and the DUNNE family and the ROSTENKOWSKI family socialized. In 1990, because of the Congressional re-districting, the 42nd Ward for the first time contained 17 precincts belonging to ROSTENKOWSKI'S Congressional District. DUNNE advised that he and ROSTENKOWSKI have a tradition of getting together around the Holidays for a New Year's drink.

DUNNE advised that he received a U.S. Capitol wicker chair, a miniature crystal U.S. Capitol paperweight and eight wine goblets engraved with the U.S. House of Representatives seal as Christmas gifts from ROSTENKOWSKI over the years. He also received a bottle of hand lotion from ROSTENKOWSKI as a gift.

DUNNE stated that he received these gifts for reasons of friendship. He believed that each gift was accompanied by a card, however, he did not keep these cards. The gifts were delivered and DUNNE did not keep the packing labels.

DUNNE stated that he never reimbursed ROSTENKOWSKI for the gifts, nor did ROSTENKOWSKI ever ask to be reimbursed. DUNNE was certain that his wife sent the ROSTENKOWSKI's a thank you card for each gift that was received. DUNNE advised that it was his custom to send [redacted] a poinsettia plant for Christmas each year. b6 b7C

ADMINISTRATIVE

On February 24, 1994, the enclosed photographs (Enc. #19) were taken of Capitol chairs, luggage, crystal cookie jars, and other property located at 1349 N. Noble, Chicago, Illinois, and 818 W. Fullerton, Chicago, Illinois.

The film was processed by the photo lab at FBIHQ, and some of the photos were found to be underexposed (i.e., the notes attached to the backs of the Capitol chairs were not readable). After reviewing the negatives to determine if the notes could be exposed, it was determined that FBIHQ could re-develop the film to expose the necessary data. Three of the five sets of negatives were returned to FBIHQ for re-possessing, and as soon as the photos are received from FBIHQ, they will be sent (along with the negatives) to WMFO.

AT CHICAGO, ILLINOIS

Will provide WMFO with a second set of photos and negatives of property photographed at 1349 N. Noble, Chicago, Illinois, and 818 W. Fullerton, Chicago, Illinois; and will continue to coordinate future leads.

[redacted] of AMERICAN STORES COMPANY, 709 East South Temple, Salt Lake City, Utah, was interviewed in the presence of corporate counsel and advised as follows:

[redacted] stated that he has met Representative DAN ROSTENKOWSKI of Illinois on only one occasion. [redacted] stated that he attended a dinner in Florida in 1985 or 1986, at which ROSTENKOWSKI was a speaker. He remembered having a conversation with ROSTENKOWSKI concerning the candidacy of JESSE JACKSON for President of the United States. He had no other conversation with ROSTENKOWSKI, nor did he receive any type of gift from him. [redacted] stated that his company owns JEWELL MARKET, which handled approximately forty percent of the grocery store volume in the Chicago, Illinois, area. His company also owns OSCO DRUG STORES, some of which are sited in Illinois. For that reason, his company has made some political contributions to ROSTENKOWSKI for campaign purposes. He stated that he nor his companies have asked for or received any type of political favors or gifts from ROSTENKOWSKI.

[redacted], was contacted at his place of business. Also present during this contact was [redacted] Corporate Counsel. Both individuals were advised of the interviewing agent as well as the nature and purpose of the contact. [redacted] acknowledged this information and thereafter advised as follows: b6 b7C

He initially met Representative DAN ROSTENKOWSKI, United States House of Representatives, in 1984 in Washington, D.C. He recalls this meeting took place in ROSTENKOWSKI's Capital office and was for the purpose of "getting to know each other" as the Representative was a powerful member of Congress and a good man to know. He stated during the succeeding years, he doubts he had more than a dozen conversations with ROSTENKOWSKI with the last actual contact having taken place in 1990.

[redacted] did state in June, 1988, he gave Representative ROSTENKOWSKI "a ride" to the West Coast. He explained that ROSTENKOWSKI, [redacted] from Chicago and a ROSTENKOWSKI aide were coming to the West Coast for a fund raiser so he volunteered to fly them to Los Angeles in his personal jet. He recalls that upon arriving in Los Angeles, he drove this party to the Universal Hilton where they were staying and then joined them for a Democratic fundraiser hosted by [redacted] that night. He indicated this is the only West Coast contact he had with ROSTENKOWSKI. b6 b7C

[redacted] concluded by stating that he has received small mementos of appreciation at Christmas time from various politicians however never received anything from ROSTENKOWSKI. He indicated he is sure that he has never been given either an decorative House of Representative chair or crystal miniature of the United States Capital from any politician. b6 b7C

REMMTEL TO FBIHQ, 3/15/94.

AFTER COORDINATION AND AGREEMENT BETWEEN FBI WMFO AND MIAMI, UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS (USAS) MIAMI AND DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE (DOJ) AND FBIHQ, AUTHORITY HAS BEEN GRANTED

58C-WF-180683-703

MAR 9 9 4 PM '94

BY APPROPRIATE BUREAU OFFICIAL AND OFFICE OF ENFORCEMENT OPERATIONS (OEO), DOJ, TO CONSENSUALLY RECORD NON-TELEPHONIC CONVERSATIONS BETWEEN COOPERATING WITNESS (CW); [redacted] b6 b7C [redacted] AND UNITED STATES CONGRESSMAN DAN ROSTENKOWSKI FOR PERIOD OF 60 DAYS, EFFECTIVE 3/15/94, TO EXPIRE 5/13/94.

THE USE OF THESE ELECTRONIC DEVICES IN THIS CASE IS BEING GRANTED IN THAT THEY ARE EXPECTED TO PROVIDE CORROBORATIVE EVIDENCE AND/OR PROTECT THE INDIVIDUAL(S) UTILIZING THE EQUIPMENT. SPECIFICALLY, THESE CONSENSUALLY RECORDED CONVERSATIONS MAY YIELD MOTIVE EVIDENCE REGARDING CRIMINAL VIOLATIONS THAT HAVE BEEN IDENTIFIED IN THE "PLATE BLOCK" INVESTIGATION. THIS MOTIVE EVIDENCE WOULD RELATE TO THE POSSIBLE MOTIVE FOR THEFTS AND EMBEZZLEMENTS FROM THE UNITED STATES HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES ON THE PART OF CONGRESSMAN ROSTENKOWSKI AS BEING ABLE TO PAY GAMBLING DEBTS.

THE PURPOSE OF A CONSENSUALLY RECORDED CONVERSATION WITH CONGRESSMAN ROSTENKOWSKI IS NOT TO DEVELOP EVIDENCE OF POSSIBLE GAMBLING HABITS OF THE CONGRESSMAN NOR DELVE INTO OTHER EXTRANEOUS ACTIVITIES. AS MIAMI AND WMFO HAVE AGREED, CW WILL DEVELOP ONLY THAT EVIDENCE THAT CORROBORATES AND COMPLEMENTS KNOWN CRIMINAL ACTIVITY AS DEVELOPED IN THE "PLATE BLOCK"

INVESTIGATION.

MIAMI AND WMFO SHOULD KEEP FBIHQ ADVISED AS TO DEVELOPMENTS

RECEIVED FROM ROSTENKOWSKI OVER THE YEARS.

[redacted] ADVISED HE IS NOT WELL ACQUAINTED WITH ROSTENKOWSKI AND IN FACT HAS ATTENDED ONLY TWO FUNDRAISERS. HE BELIEVES THOSE FUNDRAISERS TOOK PLACE IN JUNE OF 1988 AND MARCH OF 1992. IN ADDITION, HE BELIEVES THE PACIFIC MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY MADE A $1,000 CONTRIBUTION TO ROSTENKOWSKI IN FEBRUARY OF 1994. [redacted] ADVISED HE HAS RECEIVED NO GIFTS WHATSOEVER FROM ROSTENKOWSKI. [redacted] RECOMMENDED THE PUBLIC RELATIONS/GOVERNMENT RELATIONS REPRESENTATIVE FOR PACIFIC MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY, [redacted] BE CONTACTED AND INTERVIEWED REGARDING HIS KNOWLEDGE OF ROSTENKOWSKI AND POTENTIAL GIFTS. [redacted] IS BETTER ACQUAINTED WITH ROSTENKOWSKI.

IN ADDITION, [redacted] SUGGESTED [redacted] OF THE IRVINE COMPANY, A MAJOR DEVELOPER IN ORANGE COUNTY, CALIFORNIA AS WELL AS THE PUBLIC RELATIONS/GOVERNMENT RELATIONS REPRESENTATIVE FOR THAT COMPANY, [redacted] ALSO BE INTERVIEWED. [redacted], telephone number [redacted] was contacted telephonically with the intent of setting up an appointment to see her husband. [redacted] furnished the following information: b6 b7C

[redacted] was [redacted] husband for 55 years but he passed away on December 11, 1991. [redacted] was told that the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) wanted to interview her husband because of gifts that her husband may have received from Representative DAN ROSTENKOWSKI. [redacted] knew that her husband was a lobbyist in Washington, D.C., for the Delaware River Port Authority and that at one time he worked for a construction firm in Pleasantville, N.Y., but she knew very little about what he did as a lobbyist. [redacted] knows that her husband knew Representative ROSTENKOWSKI but she did not know anything about the dealings that he had with Representative ROSTENKOWSKI. [redacted] would occasionally ask questions of her husband about his work and he would tell her that she was prying and he would not talk about his work. [redacted] knows of no gifts that Representative ROSTENKOWSKI gave to her husband. [redacted] was asked if her husband had an office and she stated that although it may sound strange she does not know if her husband had an office. [redacted] has never seen any items in her house with Representative ROSTENKOWSKI'S name on them or which appear to have come from Representative ROSTENKOWSKI. b6 b7C

[redacted] was contacted at his place of employment and advised of the official identity of the interviewing agent. [redacted] provided the following information: b6 b7C

[redacted] said that he met Congressman DAN ROSTENKOWSKI in the early 1980's. [redacted] believes that this first meeting was at the BOB HOPE Desert Classic Golf Tournament. Since that time, [redacted] has maintained a social relationship with ROSTENKOWSKI and usually plays golf with him when he comes to the Palm Springs area. [redacted] said that ROSTENKOWSKI would come to Palm Springs several times a year although he has not come out in the past two years. [redacted] said that because so many people from the Chicago area come to Palm Springs in the winter, ROSTENKOWSKI has a lot of friends to visit when he comes out. [redacted] said one particularly close friend is [redacted], who may have initially introduced him to ROSTENKOWSKI. b6 b7C

[redacted] said he has never received anything from ROSTENKOWSKI such as inscribed House of Representative chairs, crystal sculptures of the Capital, fine china or expensive luggage. In addition, [redacted] has never requested any Federal legislative action from ROSTENKOWSKI and has never asked him to intercede on his behalf with any Federal agency. [redacted] said he has written ROSTENKOWSKI on several occasions expressing his concerns and opinions on legislative matters but he has written to other congressmen and senators as well. [redacted] said he writes these letters as a concerned U.S. citizen and not to curry any Congressional favor. b6 b7C

[redacted] said that the last time he spoke to ROSTENKOWSKI was approximately six months ago and this conversation was strictly social.

[redacted] telephone number [redacted] was contacted at his former place of employment where he maintains an office. He was advised of the identity of the interviewing agent as well as the nature and purpose of the contact. He acknowledged this information and thereafter advised as follows:

He has been retired from [redacted] for over five years however knows Representative DAN ROSTENKOWSKI as that individual chaired an important House Committee which dealt with important company tax issues. He indicated he never personally met or talked with Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI and his knowledge of that individual is gleamed from contacts with [redacted] and the press.

[redacted] stated that he has never donated to Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI's election campaign nor has he been involved in any Democratic fundraiser involving the Representative. He has never received any momento of any type from ROSTENKOWSKI and doubts anyone in the company has received anything. He did volunteer to inquiry of the [redacted] or any "gifts" had been provided by Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI.

[redacted] date of birth [redacted] Social Security number [redacted] [redacted] was advised of the identity of the interviewing Agent and the purpose of the interview, and provided the following information: b6 b7C

[redacted] was married to [redacted] from the winter of 1980, until their divorce was finalized in July of 1986. [redacted] filed for a divorce and separated from [redacted] approximately August, 1985, shortly after [redacted] attempted suicide.

[redacted] was asked if (while she was married to [redacted] [redacted] ever worked for DAN ROSTENKOWSKI and [redacted] stated that she had never known [redacted] to work for ROSTENKOWSKI. [redacted] stated that [redacted] could never hold down a permanent job for an extended period of time, and to her knowledge, [redacted] did not work for ROSTENKOWSKI and never worked at ROSTENKOWSKI's District Office. b6 b7C

[redacted] provided the interviewing Agent with partial copies of her and [redacted] joint tax returns for the years 1983 through 1985. (The partial tax returns can be found in the 1A Exhibit Section of this file.) [redacted] stated that the tax returns document that [redacted] listed his occupation as being an actor in 1983, an actor/producer in 1984, and a production assistant in 1985.

[redacted] was shown a list of [redacted] supposed dates of employment and amounts received from ROSTENKOWSKI (a copy of which can be found in the 1A Exhibit Section of this file) which spanned dates from May, 1, 1983, to July, 31, 1986. [redacted] was asked if [redacted] ever received any of the payments documented on the list, and [redacted] acknowledged that [redacted] had received Federal paychecks from ROSTENKOWSKI from at least [redacted] to 1985. [redacted] stated that she has no idea whether or not [redacted] remained on b6 b7C

ROSTENKOWSKI's payroll after 1985. [redacted] stated that, in 1983 when the first federal paycheck arrived, she asked [redacted] how he could be getting a check from ROSTENKOWSKI when he didn't work for him, and [redacted] responded, don't worry about it, my father had ROSTENKOWSKI's daughter on his payroll, everybody does it, and don't talk to anyone about it. [redacted] stated that [redacted] prior to being convicted and sentenced in 1986 or 1987. [redacted] did not know the details surrounding [redacted] conviction, but stated that it had something to do with the finances of a flea market. b6 b7C

[redacted] was asked if she had any documents which would indicate how much money [redacted] had received from ROSTENKOWSKI, and [redacted] provided the interviewing Agent with copies of [redacted] original W-2 forms for the years 1983 through 1985. (The W-2 forms can be found in the 1A Exhibit Section of this file.) Three of [redacted] W-2 forms were from the U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES (USHR) for the years 1983 to 1985. The USHR W-2 forms indicated that [redacted] received wages totaling [redacted] in 1983, [redacted] in 1984, and [redacted] in 1985. [redacted] stated that, to her knowledge, the amounts listed on the USHR W-2 forms were the amounts that [redacted] had received from the USHR. [redacted] stated that she has no information that [redacted] ever paid a kickback to ROSTENKOWSKI. b6 b7C

[redacted] was asked if [redacted] had received the wages listed on the USHR W-2 forms in monthly checks or one lump sum, and [redacted] stated that it was her belief that [redacted] had received checks in amounts that equaled those listed on [redacted] supposed employment record. [redacted] was asked if she had any bank records which would reflect [redacted] deposit of funds received from the USHR, and [redacted] advised that she would have to search her records to determine if she still had her savings and checking account records. [redacted] advised that from 1983 to 1985, [redacted] handled the finances for both of them, because she was working full-time and going to school to get a Masters degree. b6 b7C

Included in the W-2 forms provided by [redacted] was a 1985 W-2 form for wages to [redacted] totaling [redacted] from the CITY OF CHICAGO. [redacted] could not recall if and or what [redacted] had done for the CITY OF CHICAGO to receive a paycheck, and [redacted] has no idea if [redacted] is still on the City's payroll. b6 b7C

[redacted] was asked if [redacted] had any other sources of income from 1983 to 1985, other than the paychecks from the USHR and CITY OF CHICAGO, and [redacted] advised that, to her knowledge, [redacted] had no other sources of income. [redacted] stated that sometime between 1983 and 1985, [redacted] was taking acting lessons at VICTORY GARDENS, and acted in a few plays near DePaul University, in Chicago, Illinois. [redacted] stated that [redacted] did not bring home a paycheck for his acting job.

[redacted] also stated that sometime around May of 1984, [redacted] and an individual named [redacted] became partners in a deal to open up a dance studio called [redacted] located on North Broadway, Chicago, Illinois. [redacted] stated that she recalled the month of May, 1984, because on May 19, 1984, she caught [redacted] together with [redacted] at their residence. [redacted] stated that [redacted] on a daily basis, spent most of the day and some evenings preparing to open the dance studio. [redacted] stated that [redacted] also spent a lot of time preparing a fund-raiser to assist in the financing of the dance studio. [redacted] indicated that [redacted] created a board of directors for the studio, and made himself [redacted]

[redacted], Date of Birth (DOB) [redacted] Place of Birth (POB) [redacted], Social Security Account Number (SSAN) [redacted] telephone [redacted] was contacted at his place of business, [redacted] telephone [redacted] where he is [redacted] After being advised of the identity of the interviewing Agent and the purpose of the interview, [redacted] voluntarily furnished the following information:

[redacted] advised that he met DAN ROSTENKOWSKI approximately twenty to twenty-five years ago in Nippersink, Wisconsin. [redacted] noted that both he and ROSTENKOWSKI own summer homes in Nippersink and over the years have golfed, dined and socialized together. [redacted] described their relationship as a strictly social friendship.

[redacted] recalled receiving several gifts from ROSTENKOWSKI including a ceramic coffee mug after a summer golf outing in Wisconsin in 1991 or 1992. [redacted] recalled that ROSTENKOWSKI and his wife, [redacted] hosted a dinner party following the golf outing at LA SALLETTE RESTAURANT in Wisconsin. [redacted] stated that ROSTENKOWSKI was handing out either ceramic mugs or bookmarks to the golf outing participants, depending on how well or poorly they played.

[redacted] further advised that he received a book from ROSTENKOWSKI on the history of the House Ways and Means Committee approximately two to three years ago. [redacted] recalled visiting ROSTENKOWSKI in his summer home and seeing the book on ROSTENKOWSKI's coffee table. [redacted] commented on how nice the book was, at which time ROSTENKOWSKI gave the book to [redacted]

[redacted] stated that for many years he received a wall calendar from ROSTENKOWSKI, however, this year he did not receive one. [redacted] advised that the calendars were always mailed to his business address. [redacted] denied receiving any other gifts.

[redacted] advised that over the years he has known ROSTENKOWSKI, he has only contributed two times to ROSTENKOWSKI's campaigns. [redacted] recalled donating $50.00 cash and a $25.00 check, however, ROSTENKOWSKI returned the $25.00 check with a note stating that the contribution was not necessary. [redacted] noted that [redacted] purchases an advertisement in the 32nd Ward Organization advertising book on an annual basis. b6 b7C

[redacted] denied ever paying for the gifts he received from ROSTENKOWSKI or ever being asked by ROSTENKOWSKI to pay or reimburse him for the gifts.

[redacted] identified STANLEY SALZMAN as an individual he knew who received what appeared to be an expensive gift from ROSTENKOWSKI. [redacted] explained that SALZMAN asked ROSTENKOWSKI for an American flag that actually flew over the Capitol. ROSTENKOWSKI subsequently gave SALZMAN a flag framed in a very nice display case with an engraved plaque. [redacted] advised that SALZMAN recently died after a bout with cancer. b6 b7C commented that ROSTENKOWSKI was the only person who ever addressed letters to him as [redacted] As such, [redacted] opined that his name and address must have been obtained from one of ROSTENKOWSKI's mailing list.

[redacted] advised that he has known ROSTENKOWSKI since he was very young and regards him as an uncle, and that he sees him about 10 times per year. [redacted] advised that his father was an Alderman in the city of Chicago with DAN ROSTENKOWSKI's father, JOE ROSTENKOWSKI, who is now deceased. [redacted] advised that when he meets with DAN ROSTENKOWSKI they eat dinner at restaurants and play golf.

[redacted] advised that he is very familiar with Chicago politics, as his father was deeply involved in city politics, and that Chicago politics tend to be everyone's hobby. [redacted] b6 b7C advised that he did not provide ROSTENKOWSKI anything that could be characterized as "advice or counsel". [redacted] advised that he might give his opinion on certain issues, but that he did not consider himself to be an advisor of ROSTENKOWSKI. ROSTENKOWSKI does not ask him for any political advice. [redacted] advised that the dinners he attends are with other individuals, the identity of which are well known. [redacted] advised he would not give us the names of the people that he attends these dinners with because investigators know them all.

[redacted] advised that he may have contributed minimal amounts to ROSTENKOWSKI's campaigns, and that he has not done so because he was asked to do it. [redacted] b6 b7C advised that none of the businesses he maintains had political action committees, and that none of the businesses he maintains has Political Action Committees or has contributed to ROSTENKOWSKI.

[redacted] advised that he is on the Board of Directors for the Democratic National Committee, and advised that ROSTENKOWSKI had no role in getting him that position. [redacted]

[redacted] felt that he was "used as a sounding board" by many political figures of which ROSTENKOWSKI is one. b6 b7C

[redacted] advised that the black wooden chair that he received from ROSTENKOWSKI was a friendship gift, and it was not received for any specific advice that he provided to ROSTENKOWSKI. [redacted] stated that he has no role in the America's Leaders Fund (ALF). [redacted] advised that he may have been asked to make a contribution on ROSTENKOWSKI's behalf, but did not recall for sure. total of $300 to the ROSTENKOWSKI for Congress Committee. [redacted] did give a total of $5,000 to the ROSTENKOWSKI Legal Defense Fund at the request of [redacted] of that Fund. [redacted] advised that ROSTENKOWSKI, himself, never asked for any contribution to the Legal Defense Fund.

[redacted] stated that he could provide no details of how the wooden chair he received was delivered to him, and that no one currently in his office would know the details of the delivery. [redacted] advised that the chair remained wrapped in its original shipping paper until the FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION (FBI) interviewed him about it, and partially opened the wrapping to view and photograph the chair. b6 b7C

[redacted] advised that he would have sent a handwritten note to ROSTENKOWSKI regarding the chair to thank him for his gift, but that he would not have kept a copy of this note. b6 b7C

[redacted] stated that he usually gets together with ROSTENKOWSKI for a Christmas party, and has done so for the last 12 to 15 years. These parties are also attended by [redacted] and [redacted] advised that he has provided gifts to ROSTENKOWSKI at these events, but that they are usually recycled gifts he receives from other individuals that he passes on. [redacted] advised that these Christmas events are usually held at [redacted] home. [redacted] stated that he has met [redacted] but he does not know [redacted] b6 b7C

[redacted] stated that he has gone to restaurants for dinner with ROSTENKOWSKI, but at these dinners political topics are seldom discussed. [redacted] advised that the type of restaurants that ROSTENKOWSKI enjoys frequenting are very difficult to hold serious political conversations in, due to the high noise level at the restaurants. [redacted] also advised that he has never attended a golf function called a "Goat Walk". b6 b7C

[redacted] was interviewed at his place of employment. Also present at this interview were AUSA [redacted] and [redacted] Attorneys, [redacted] and [redacted]. After being advised of the nature of the interview, [redacted] provided the following information. b6 b7C

[redacted] advised that he has been a close friend and supporter of Rep. DAN ROSTENKOWSKI for about 20 years. [redacted] stated that he has provided legislative advice to ROSTENKOWSKI in the area of tax exempt bonds as they related to "sky boxes" at the stadium where the Chicago White Sox baseball team plays, a team of which he is a part owner. [redacted] thought that over the years ROSTENKOWSKI may have asked him questions regarding the insurance industry but it was not that often as the insurance industry is state regulated. [redacted] advised that most of the conversations that he would have with ROSTENKOWSKI were regarding world events. [redacted] would attend dinners with ROSTENKOWSKI on an irregular basis at Gibson's Restaurant. He did not attend any golf event referred to as a "Goatwalk". [redacted] contributed $5000 in 1993 to the ROSTENKOWSKI Legal Defense Fund. b6 b7C

[redacted] stated that he thought the chair he received was given to him around Christmas although he was not positive of the delivery time. [redacted] was delivered to his company's receiving room and remained at that location for about a month and a half. Any gifts that [redacted] would have provided to ROSTENKOWSKI were probably business related. b6 b7C

[redacted] advised that he would not characterize himself as a member of a "Kitchen Cabinet" of ROSTENKOWSKI's. [redacted] advised that in 1987 he attended a fundraiser for ROSTENKOWSKI which was hosted by [redacted] and contributed $1000, and he and his wife both contributed $1000 in 1992 to ROSTENKOWSKI. Several Near North executive employees also contributed in 1992, but none of those contributions were at [redacted] request or direction. b6 b7C

[redacted] was interviewed in the presence of his attorney, [redacted] Also present for this interview was AUSA [redacted] After being advised of the nature of the interview, [redacted] provided the following information:

[redacted] advised that he sees Rep. DAN ROSTENKOWSKI about six to eight times per year for dinner and golf outings. When he goes to dinner with ROSTENKOWSKI there are usually a number of people that attend and the people can include [redacted] and [redacted] These dinners are very informal and seldom are matters of Federal legislation discussed during the dinners and [redacted] did not think that ROSTENKOWSKI used these gatherings with his friends as forums. [redacted] recalled that the only time that he spoke to ROSTENKOWSKI regarding legislation was in the 1970's and early 1980's when [redacted] had to testify before the U.S. Senate. During the 1990's, [redacted] has explained the position of the electric power industry to ROSTENKOWSKI and any legislative advise given to him would be in that general area.

[redacted] believed that he first met ROSTENKOWSKI in the year 1965 when he was appointed to the Junior Board of Directors for Mercy Hospital. Several times [redacted] has advised ROSTENKOWSKI about speaking engagements in the city of Chicago that he is invited to regarding the importance of the people inviting him to speak and their membership size. During this advise that he provided, legislative agenda was never discussed.

[redacted] stated that he has probably contributed to ROSTENKOWSKI several hundred dollars for his campaigns and that he plays no role whatever in his PAC. ROSTENKOWSKI has never asked him to contribute. Regarding his receipt of gifts, due to an employee rotational system, no one would recall the delivery of any gifts and he does not recall the time of year that the gifts arrived. [redacted] believed that the chair he received was delivered to his office, but was not positive. [redacted] advised

[redacted] was interviewed at the office of his attorney, [redacted] Also present at this interview, in addition to [redacted] was Assistant United States Attorney (AUSA) [redacted] After being advised of the nature of the interview, [redacted] provided the following information: b6 b7C

[redacted] advised that he does not "presume" to give advice on Governmental matters. [redacted] advised that he has spoken with members of the Illinois Delegation regarding military matters, but since ROSTENKOWSKI is Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, these issues do not affect ROSTENKOWSKI's work in the Congress extensively. [redacted] advised that the gifts that were provided to him by ROSTENKOWSKI were given to him out of friendship and not in appreciation or of compensation for advice given on representational matters. b6 b7C

ROSTENKOWSKI has never asked him for donations to any charities or for any other purpose after giving him a black wooden chair or a crystal sculpture miniature replica of the United States Capitol. [redacted] stated that it would "be the last thing he would do, it didn't happen, it would be totally out of character". [redacted] advised that he has given to the Mercy Hospital Fund, which is a favorite charity of ROSTENKOWSKI. [redacted] stated that this contribution to the Mercy Hospital Fund was of his own. b6 b7C

In 1987, [redacted] and DICK OGILVIE, the former Republican Governor of Illinois, held a fund raiser for ROSTENKOWSKI in order to discourage any challengers to him. [redacted] advised that he, as well as many other individuals who had received chairs from ROSTENKOWSKI, donated $1,000 to this event. [redacted] plans to donate to the Legal Defense Fund at the request of [redacted] and [redacted], who held a lunch meeting regarding the Fund. ROSTENKOWSKI himself has never asked for political contributions, [redacted] said, further stating, "it doesn't fit him". b6 b7C

[redacted] advised that the wooden chair he received from ROSTENKOWSKI was delivered to the 45th Ward office, but that no one recalls the details of the delivery. [redacted] stated he did recall a telephone call from [redacted] who said to him, "I got a chair for you. Where do you want it sent?" [redacted] advised he told her to send it to the 45th Ward offices. [redacted] stated that he believed that the crystal Capitol sculpture he received from ROSTENKOWSKI was received at his law office and not the 45th Ward office, as he originally thought, because that is where the Capitol was located. [redacted] advised that he was sure that it was not personally presented to him by ROSTENKOWSKI, and that he assumed the gifts both came around Christmas time, the crystal Capitol approximately two years ago, and the chair several years ago. b6 b7C

[redacted] advised that he has no recollection of sending a thank you note to ROSTENKOWSKI, and would be very surprised if he had sent him one. [redacted] stated that he would have thanked ROSTENKOWSKI for his gifts verbally. b6 b7C

[redacted] advised that he has no role whatsoever in the ROSTENKOWSKI for Congress Committee, but that he is a Board Member on the America's Leaders Fund (ALF).

[redacted] stated that he has received copies of Federal Election Committee (FEC) reports in the past, but he did not notice that these reports had stopped arriving. [redacted] b6 b7C advised that he has not given ROSTENKOWSKI what he would term as advice, and that he would not consult on political issues with him, and that he would not consider himself to be a part of any "kitchen cabinet". [redacted] advised that "the tenor of the meetings with ROSTENKOWSKI was social".

[redacted] recalled that he received a crystal Capitol sculpture from ROSTENKOWSKI, as well as a chair from the Congressman, and that he received the Capitol sculpture first before he received the chair, and that he was relatively sure that both of these gifts arrived at Christmas time of different years. [redacted] advised that he did not discuss these gifts he received from ROSTENKOWSKI with [redacted] b6 b7C

[redacted] stated that he did not make a copy of any note that he might have given to ROSTENKOWSKI thanking him for either of the gifts he received from him. [redacted] stated that he has made charitable and political contributions, but that none of the contributions he has made were at ROSTENKOWSKI's request. [redacted] advised that the gifts he received from ROSTENKOWSKI were accepted in friendship, but that it was hard to differentiate between friendship and politics. [redacted] stated that he hoped the gifts he received from ROSTENKOWSKI leaned toward friendship. b6 b7C

[redacted] stated that he had been to Big Foot Country Club less than once per year. [redacted] advised that on one occasion, he was the guest of ROSTENKOWSKI in Sun Valley, Idaho, for the Thompson Golf Tournament. [redacted] advised that gifts provided to ROSTENKOWSKI were limited to steaks that he provided to the Congressman at Christmas. b6 b7C

[redacted] advised that he was friends with TERRY GABINSKI, and that he met him through his position of a Chicago Alderman and through ROSTENKOWSKI. [redacted] stated that he does b6 b7C

[redacted] advised that he has had a long relationship with Representative DAN ROSTENKOWSKI, and that he sees him about once per month usually in the company of other people who gather for social occasions with the Congressman. [redacted] stated that when the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA) was being actively debated, he saw ROSTENKOWSKI more often, commenting that he saw him sometimes two to three times per week to discuss that issue. When in the city of Chicago, [redacted] meets with ROSTENKOWSKI for dinner, and they usually go to dinner in the company of their wives and they go to Myron's and Phil's Restaurant or to Gibson's Restaurant. b6 b7C

[redacted] advised that he occasionally golfs with ROSTENKOWSKI, and that he had been to an event called a "Goat Walk" on three different occasions. [redacted] stated that this "Goat Walk" was held late in the fall of the year at Big Foot Country Club. [redacted] advised that at this event glass beer mugs may have been given as gifts by ROSTENKOWSKI. [redacted] stated that he may have gone to a golf event for [redacted] as ROSTENKOWSKI's guest, but did not recall positively if he had done so. [redacted] advised that he is a member of the Board of the America's Leaders Fund (ALF), and that he attended the only Board meeting that he knows was ever held by ALF. [redacted] advised that in 1987, [redacted] held a fund raiser for ROSTENKOWSKI to raise money for the upcoming elections. [redacted] stated that it was the intention of ROSTENKOWSKI to demonstrate his political strength to keep political challengers out of the 1988 election. [redacted] advised that he did not recall ROSTENKOWSKI ever asking him for any type of contribution. [redacted] advised that from time to time he has given what he would refer to as "advice" to ROSTENKOWSKI, adding that ROSTENKOWSKI is not the kind of person that normally follows the advice of others. [redacted] stated that a person had to be indirect in providing any advice to ROSTENKOWSKI. [redacted] further advised that there was a blurred distinction between friendship and politics with ROSTENKOWSKI.

[redacted] stated that he has spoken to ROSTENKOWSKI regarding the ongoing criminal investigation that he faces, and that he has given political advice about how to answer questions posed to him about the investigation from various sources including the media. [redacted] stated that it was his opinion that ROSTENKOWSKI does not like to talk about the investigation. [redacted] stated that he may have spoken to [redacted] about the investigation, but did not specifically recall. [redacted] stated that he has not donated to the Legal Defense Fund which has been established for ROSTENKOWSKI, but that he might donate to this fund in the future. [redacted] advised that after he had a discussion with his wife, he determined that the crystal Capitol sculpture he received from ROSTENKOWSKI was received in 1992 around Christmas time, and that the Congressional chair that he received from ROSTENKOWSKI was received late in 1991 at his office at [redacted]

[redacted] advised that he has been friends with Representative DAN ROSTENKOWSKI since ROSTENKOWSKI was a State Senator in the State of Illinois in the 1950's, or for about 35 years, and that he sees ROSTENKOWSKI on a social basis approximately 30 times per year. [redacted] advised that he has attended golf outings with ROSTENKOWSKI at Big Foot Country Club and at Lake Geneva Country Club which is located in Wisconsin. [redacted] advised that he sees ROSTENKOWSKI much more often between May and September because of the golf outings that he attends with ROSTENKOWSKI. [redacted] also advised that he frequently has dinner with ROSTENKOWSKI at Myron's and Phil's Restaurant and Gibson's Restaurant, but at these restaurant dinners, ROSTENKOWSKI does not talk much about politics or his affairs in Washington, D.C. [redacted] advised that most of his contact is in the Chicago area with ROSTENKOWSKI, as he does not get to Washington, D.C., very often.

[redacted] advised that he did not attend a 1992 golf event, called a "Goat Walk", but he was familiar with what the event was. [redacted] stated that he attended the DANNY THOMPSON Golf Tournament. [redacted] recalled that in 1991, ROSTENKOWSKI considered not running for re-election to the United States House of Representatives, although he recalled no discussion of the possibility of him being able to take his campaign fund if he quit Congress. [redacted] felt that ROSTENKOWSKI had too distinguished of a career not to continue his representation in the House. b6 b7C

[redacted] recalled that he was out of town when he received a black wooden chair from ROSTENKOWSKI, that the chair was delivered to his place of business, and that he recalled no details about the delivery of the chair, and that no one in his office recalled any details of the chair delivery, as the secretary who was employed at that time no longer works for him. [redacted] advised that he believed the chair was delivered to him around Christmas time, and that he did not recall if he sent a written thank you note to ROSTENKOWSKI, and if he did send such a note, he would not have made a copy of it. b6 b7C

[redacted] advised that he also received glass beer mugs from ROSTENKOWSKI, but does not recall when the mugs were received, and that the mugs were not large in size. [redacted] advised that he has had dinners at ROSTENKOWSKI's home in Chicago, but that he did not recall the type of china that was utilized. b6 b7C

[redacted] stated that he knows [redacted], and that she is highly thought of at DAN ROSTENKOWSKI's office, although he does not know what she did specifically. [redacted] stated that in his opinion, any gifts he received from ROSTENKOWSKI were given to him in friendship and for his political support. b6 b7C

[redacted] advised that he has gone to dinner often with ROSTENKOWSKI mainly at a Chicago restaurant called Gibson's. [redacted] advised that another restaurant that they frequented which is now closed is the Cafe Bohemia. [redacted] stated that about five or six times per year he will get together with ROSTENKOWSKI for dinner. [redacted] advised that he has attended golf outings with ROSTENKOWSKI and often after those outings, they will go out to dinner and the group would contain between five and fifty people that are dining. [redacted] stated that some of the individuals that go to dinner with them are [redacted] and [redacted] advised that he never attended any dinners at ROSTENKOWSKI's home in Chicago.

[redacted] stated that he has been to Lake Geneva on three occasions and that he has participated in a golf event known as a "goat walk" on six or seven different occasions. [redacted] advised that this goat walk is hosted by ROSTENKOWSKI to sponsor a Catholic charitable organization in Twin Lakes, Wisconsin. After the goat walk there would have been a dinner. [redacted] could not recall if he had gotten any beer mugs from ROSTENKOWSKI after this charitable event or any other event. [redacted] stated that there was a goat walk in the year 1992, but that he did not think there was one last year. [redacted] further advised that he participated in the DANNY THOMAS charity event held in Sun Valley, Idaho which is held to raise money for leukemia.

[redacted] advised that he considers ROSTENKOWSKI to be a very dear friend of his and a very skilled legislator. [redacted] stated that he received a black wooden chair from ROSTENKOWSKI at his home in Wadsworth, Illinois, and that he did not know how it came or the particular time of year that it came. [redacted] assumed that the chair was received in the last four years as that is the length of time he has been at this residence. [redacted] stated that he could not recall if it came around the time of the 1992 Congressional Election, but he did recall that it came wrapped in paper and upon further recollection, thought that it might have been around Christmas time that it was received although he could not state positively.

[redacted] stated that he recalled a conversation that ROSTENKOWSKI had as to whether or not to run for re-election in 1992. [redacted] stated that ROSTENKOWSKI told him, "Don't be surprised if I don't run."

[redacted] did not recall thanking ROSTENKOWSKI for the chair that he received, and that he was sure that he did not send a thank you note to him. [redacted] further advised that he did not recall if a note came delivered with the chair. [redacted] stated that he would check with his wife to see if she may have written a thank you note to ROSTENKOWSKI for the chair. [redacted] advised that he has asked his wife regarding the delivery of the chair to their home and she did not recall the circumstances of the delivery. b6 b7C

[redacted] stated that he has a crystal capitol sculpture that he received from ROSTENKOWSKI and that it has a brass plaque attached to it which says, "To [redacted] and [redacted] friendship, Dan and [redacted] advised that he does not recall the specifics of the crystal capitol as he receives so many gifts in his line of work as [redacted] b6 b7C

[redacted] advised that he has on many occasions talked politics with ROSTENKOWSKI and recalled specifically arguing about the tax bill which was recently passed which was devastating to the employees of his union. [redacted] advised that he lobbied heavily against the passage of this tax bill for that reason. [redacted] advised that the HERE union is very much dependent on the Ways and Means Committee and the legislation that flows through that committee due to the impact that it has on his union members. [redacted] advised that the conversations that he has had with ROSTENKOWSKI center around the union that he endorses the issues that are favorable to his union. [redacted] advised that he does not consider himself to be a member of a "kitchen cabinet". b6 b7C

[redacted] advised that he has never provided any gifts to ROSTENKOWSKI, and he did not believe that the gifts that he received from ROSTENKOWSKI were in lieu of payment for any advice he may have provided to him. [redacted] advised that ROSTENKOWSKI has never asked for any political contributions from him nor has he ever asked for any charitable contributions. [redacted] advised that the HERE has paid honoraria on occasion to ROSTENKOWSKI for his appearances. b6 b7C

[redacted] advised that any contributions made to ROSTENKOWSKI were union contributions. [redacted] stated that the HERE made a contribution of $5,000.00 to ROSTENKOWSKI's legal defense fund in 1993 and will probably donate another $5,000.00 b6 b7C in 1994. [redacted] advised that the decision to make this contribution was his and that he suggested to his union to provide this money to the legal defense fund. [redacted] stated that he has no information regarding other members of the union regarding contributions they have made to ROSTENKOWSKI.

[redacted] stated that in 1987, [redacted] had a large fund raiser for ROSTENKOWSKI. [redacted] recalled that he was at a kickoff luncheon during this fund raiser. [redacted] did not know specifically why this fund raiser was held in 1987 as opposed to any other fund raiser that was held. [redacted] did not recall if he was on a 1992 fund raising committee.

[redacted] advised that he was not familiar with the America's Leaders Fund and was not affiliated with that organization in any way. [redacted] stated that he did not discuss reimbursement for any of the gifts that he received. [redacted] advised that he would check on whether or not he had received any beer mugs by checking his inventory of glassware, adding that he has received congressional glassware from a number of sources including former Speaker TIP O'NEILL.

[redacted] advised that he has married children, and that they were married in the late 1980's. [redacted] was asked if he recalled any of the gifts that ROSTENKOWSKI provided to his children and [redacted] replied that he could not recollect the gifts that he provided.

[redacted] stated that [redacted] of the HERE is a close personal friend of ROSTENKOWSKI and has been for quite some time. [redacted] advised that [redacted] has been the [redacted] of HERE since 1974 and he estimated that [redacted] knew ROSTENKOWSKI for about fifteen years prior to becoming [redacted]

[redacted] advised that he spoke with [redacted] regarding his interview with the FBI and that he inquired what kind of questions were being asked.

[redacted] advised that he has discussed the ongoing investigation with ROSTENKOWSKI and that ROSTENKOWSKi is very depressed about the investigation.

On 5/9/94, [redacted] (aka [redacted], Real Estate Division, GENERAL SERVICES ADMINISTRATION (GSA), Region 5, 230 S. Dearborn Street, Chicago, Illinois, (312)353-5603, faxed SA [redacted] a GSA document which verified that DAN ROSTENKOWSKI's assignment of office space at 230 S. Dearborn Street, Chicago, Illinois was terminated on April 1, 1983.

Additional information obtained from the GSA document faxed 5/9/94, indicated that ROSTENKOWSKI's office was located on the 39th Floor of the KLUCZYNSKI FEDERAL BUILDING, building number IL0236FC, office assignment number AIL45185, 230 S. Dearborn Street, Chicago, Illinois.

On 5/16/94, [redacted] faxed SA [redacted] a GSA SPACE ASSIGNMENT RECORD (SAR) which verified that ROSTENKOWSI was assigned office space at 230 S. Dearborn Street, Chicago, Illinois, effective May 1, 1975. The remarks section of the SAR stated that ROSTENKOWSKI's Office was relocated from the EVERETT McKINLEY DIRKSEN BUILDING, 219 S. Dearborn Street, Chicago, Illinois. b6 b7C

The SAR also indicated that ROSTENKOWSKI's office was located on the 39th Floor of the KLUCZYNSKI BUILDING, but documented the building number as BIL0236FC and the office assignment number as AIL518574. The SAR was dated 6/9/75, and signed by [redacted] of the FEDERAL BUILDINGS FUND ASSIGNMENT & UTILIZATION BRANCH, 36th Floor, 230 S. Dearborn Street, Chicago, Illinois. b6 b7C

[redacted] stated that he worked as an assistant for Congressman MARTIN RUSSO from approximately 1974 to 1983 or 1984. [redacted] handled immigration and Social Security disability problems at RUSSO's Office. [redacted] worked at RUSSO's Washington D.C. Office for approximately 7 or 8 months prior to returning to Chicago to attend classes at JOHN MARSHALL LAW SCHOOL (JMLS), 315 S. Plymouth Court, Chicago, Illinois. [redacted] started taking classes at JMLS, and began working at RUSSO's Chicago office located at 230 S. Dearborn Street, Chicago, Illinois, in approximately September, 1974. [redacted] could not remember the floor number at 230 S. Dearborn Street where RUSSO had his offices, but [redacted] believed that DAN ROSTENKOWSKI's office (located at 230 or 219 S. Dearborn Street) was a few floors above RUSSO's office. [redacted] was not certain if ROSTENKOWSKI's office was located at 230 or 219 S. Dearborn Street, because he had never visited ROSTENKOWSKI's office.

[redacted] was asked if he knew ED PIENCZAK and/or [redacted] stated that he was more familiar with PIENCZAK than [redacted] because he had known PIENCZAK for a longer period of time, and PIENCZAK had a similar ethnic background. [redacted] stated that PIENCZAK worked for Congressman JOHN KLUCZYNSKI until KLUCZYNSKI died, then PIENCZAK started working for ROSTENKOWSKI. [redacted] was asked how he knew PIENCZAK worked for ROSTENKOWSKI, and [redacted] stated that he would talk to PIENCZAK at RUSSO's Chicago Office and RUSSO fundraisers. [redacted] stated that PIENCZAK told him that he (PIENCZAK) was working for ROSTENKOWSKI, and PIENCZAK would occasionally drop by RUSSO's office and ask [redacted] about an immigration case he had. [redacted] recalled the last time he spoke to PIENCZAK was in regards to an immigration case PIENCZAK was handling in the mid 1980's.

by WJH/SA [redacted] SA TJB/tb Date dictated 5/10/94

This document contains neither recommendations nor conclusions of the FBI. It is the property of the FBI and is loaned to your agency; it and its contents are not to be distributed outside your agency.

[redacted] could not specifically recall how he met [redacted] but stated that PIENCZAK may have told [redacted] to call [redacted] [redacted] estimated that it was around 1980 when he first spoke with [redacted] [redacted] stated that he made that estimate based on his recollection that he was maintaining a satellite office for RUSSO at 230 S. Dearborn Street, around 1980 (because RUSSO had moved his offices out of 230 S. Dearborn Street) when he first spoke with [redacted] b6 b7C

Later in the interview, [redacted] recalled that he remembered having his first conversation with [redacted] a few days after POPE JOHN PAUL II was elected POPE (October 16, 1978). Most of [redacted] conversations with [redacted] were over the telephone, and [redacted] advised that [redacted] calls were more of a social nature than work related. [redacted] cannot recall ever having a discussion with [redacted] about Congressional work. [redacted] knows very little about [redacted] and only spoke to him approximately 15 to 20 times over a period of at most a year to a year and a-half. [redacted] was not certain, but stated that [redacted] may have been attending law classes at DePAUL UNIVERSITY, located in Chicago, Illinois (25 E. Jackson and/or 243 S. Wabash). [redacted] remembers encouraging [redacted] to complete his law degree. b6 b7C

[redacted] stated that he could not verify either PIENCZAK's or [redacted] employment with ROSTENKOWSKI, because he had never been to ROSTENKOWSKI's office at either 219 or 230 S. Dearborn Street, Chicago, Illinois.

[redacted] was asked if [redacted] had ever been employed by DAN ROSTENKOWSKI. [redacted] stated that [redacted] put in a minimum of 40 hours per week at the DPDC, working everyday Monday through Friday from approximately November, 1984 until [redacted] attempted suicide in the summer of 1985 (Approximately July 14, 1985). [redacted] stated that there was no way that [redacted] could have been working full time at the DPDC, and full time for ROSTENKOWSKI or anyone else. [redacted] duties at the DPDC included writing grants for students, taking care of the payroll, renovating and maintaining the dance studio, purchasing office furniture and supplies, and organizing fundraisers for the DPDC. b6 b7C

[redacted] stated that [redacted] held a fundraiser to benefit the DPDC on February 2, 1984. [redacted] stated that ROSTENKOWSKI was an honorary member of the DPDC. [redacted] stated that the DPDC was using ROSTENKOWSKI's name to promote business for the dance studio, but to [redacted] knowledge ROSTENKOWSKI never contributed money to the DPDC. b6 b7C

[redacted] has never received a gift of any kind from ROSTENKOWSKI or his staff. [redacted] is not aware of gifts provided to any individual from the congressman or his staff.

[redacted] is aware representatives from PMLIC have in the past attended fund raisers for ROSTENKOWSKI, however those have been relatively few in numbers over the past 8 to 10 years.

[redacted] believes all contributions have been for $1000 and primarily were paid as entrance to a fund raiser. The PAC may have made a straight contribution although [redacted] can not recall when that took place.

[redacted] believes in 1986 he raised a total of $5000 for ROSTENKOWSKI as a request from [redacted] He cannot recall who he contacted to come up with the money. He believes the PMLIC PAC probably contributed $1000 of that money.

[redacted] recalls the $5000 was raised in connection with a reception held in Los Angeles to honor ROSTENKOWSKI. The reception was held at the home of [redacted]. In exchange for raising the money [redacted] was named a member of the organizing committee and along with other prominent individuals was listed on the invitation. He believes the $1000 from the PAC was paid to AMERICA'S LEADER FUND.

2/24/94 - $1000

[redacted] Pacific Mutual Life Insurance Company (PMLIC), 700 Newport Center Drive, Newport Beach, CA., was advised as to the identity of the interviewing agent and the purpose of the interview at which time he advised as follows: b6 b7C

[redacted] stated his Date of Birth is [redacted] and he was born in [redacted] His Social Security Account Number is [redacted].

[redacted] advised his home address is [redacted] from PMLIC in September of 1987 and has been [redacted] the company since that time. [redacted] maintains an office at the PMLIC at the above mentioned address. b6 b7C

[redacted] is familiar with CONGRESSMAN DAN ROSTENKOWSKI and confirmed that PMLIC had attended fund raisers and contributed to ROSTENKOWSKI in the past. [redacted] does not recall personally contributing to the Congressman.

[redacted] considers himself a former acquaintance of ROSTENKOWSKI, not a personal friend. He is confident ROSTENKOWSKI would not know [redacted] by name if they met again. [redacted] believes any contributions to ROSTENKOWSKI came from the PMLIC Political Action Committee (PAC). b6 b7C

[redacted] advised at no time has he ever received a gift from ROSTENKOWSKI or any of his staff members. He is not and has not been acquainted with anyone else from ROSTENKOWSKI'S staff. [redacted] is not aware of any gifts large or small provided by ROSTENKOWSKI or his staff. b6 b7C

[redacted] believes one of the fund raisers he attended in the past was organized by [redacted] in Los Angeles. In addition he believes [redacted] and [redacted] from the IRVINE COMPANY also may have organized some event for ROSTENKOWSKI. He believes those two individuals may have been more closely

Date of transcription 5/24/94

[redacted] Date of Birth [redacted], Social Security number [redacted] was advised of the identity of the interviewing Agent and the nature of the interview, and provided the following information: b6 b7C

[redacted] was an employee for Congressman JOHN G. FARY from the Fall of 1975 until 1983. [redacted] stated that FARY was elected to the UNITED STATES HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES (USHR) in a special election held in 1975, to fill a vacancy created by the death of Congressman JOHN C. KLUCZYNSKI.

[redacted] stated that when FARY was elected to the USHR he kept many of KLUCZYNSKI's employees and moved into KLUCZYNSKI's office at 230 S. Dearborn Street, Chicago, Illinois. [redacted] stated that ED PIENCZAK was KLUCZYNSKI's Administrative Assistant (AA), and FARY didn't want to demote PIENCZAK so he made PIENCZAK his AA in title only. [redacted] stated that he was FARY's real AA, but was not given the title until 1978. [redacted] stated that sometime in 1978, PIENCZAK and FARY had a disagreement, and PIENCZAK left FARY's employment and went to work for DAN ROSTENKOWSKI. PIENCZAK told [redacted] that he wanted to work for ROSTENKOWSKI so he could build up his pension. b6 b7C

[redacted] assisted the interviewing Agent in making a sketch of the layout of FARY's and ROSTENKOWSKI's Office space at 230 S. Dearborn Street, Chicago, Illinois. [redacted] stated that from the Fall of 1975 to 1977, FARY's Office (formerly KLUCZYNSKI's Office) had an adjoining interior doorway with ROSTENKOWSKI's Office. [redacted] stated that, for approximately one and a-half years, beginning in the Fall of 1975, the only ROSTENKOWSKI employee he saw at ROSTENKOWSKI's office at 230 S. Dearborn Street, was ROSTENKOWSKI's AA WALTER NEGA. [redacted] stated that NEGA was at the office on an irregular basis and [redacted] had no idea what NEGA was doing at the office. b6 b7C

In 1977, FARY's Office moved down the hallway at 230 S. Dearborn Street, Chicago, Illinois, into what use to be the UNITED STATES BOND OFFICE. [redacted] stated that ROSTENKOWSKI's Office was reduced in size, and there was no longer an adjoining doorway between FARY's and ROSTENKOWSKI's office. [redacted] stated that ROSTENKOWSKI's Office became a small one room office with a single desk and telephone. [redacted] stated that from approximately 1978 until 1980, PIENCZAK was answering phones and working immigration cases at ROSTENKOWSKI's office at 230 S. Dearborn Street, Chicago, Illinois. [redacted] stated that he saw PIENCZAK at least once a week walking to ROSTENKOWSKI's office, but the door was closed most of the time, so [redacted] could not verify that PIENCZAK was there on a daily basis. [redacted] had no idea what PIENCZAK did after 1980 because FARY moved his office out of 230 S. Dearborn Street, Chicago, Illinois, and [redacted] never saw PIENCZAK again.

[redacted] stated that ELEANOR GEORGALAS was on FARY's payroll and worked immigration cases for FARY. [redacted] stated that GEORGALAS also helped PIENCZAK, when he was employed by ROSTENKOWSKI, with his immigration cases. [redacted] stated that when FARY moved out of 230 S. Dearborn Street, GEORGALAS was assigned to manage FARY's office located at 5200 or 5300 S. Cicero Avenue, Chicago, Illinois. Approximately twelve to eighteen months after the move, GEORGALAS put in her resignation letter. [redacted] stated that GEORGALAS wanted to be closer to home, and told [redacted] that she was going to work for ROSTENKOWSKI at his Damen Street Office. [redacted] stated that he never saw or spoke with GEORGALAS again.

[redacted] stated that the only ROSTENKOWSKI employees that worked at 230 S. Dearborn Street, Chicago, Illinois, were WALTER NEGA, ELEANOR GEORGALAS, and ED PIENCZAK.

[redacted] stated that if someone was working at ROSTENKOWSKI's Dearborn Street Office on a regular basis, he would have known about it. [redacted] stated that he had never heard of [redacted] and no one with the name [redacted] ever worked for ROSTENKOWSKI at 230 S. Dearborn Street, Chicago, Illinois, while FARY's Office was located at 230 S. Dearborn Street.

[redacted] date of birth [redacted], Social Security Account Number [redacted], was advised of the identity of the interviewing Agent and the purpose of the interview, and provided the following information: b6 b7C

[redacted] stated that from the late 1970's to early 1980's, when he frequently went up to Lake Benedict, Wisconsin, many of the residents had gas storage tanks on the lake to fuel their boats. [redacted] stated that ROSTENKOWSKI didn't have a gas tank on the lake, and would fill-up his boats with gas at BENEDICT'S LANDING, a restaurant/lounge located on Lake Benedict. [redacted] stated that the gas tanks were removed from the lake around 1988 or 1989 for environmental reasons, and [redacted] does not know how ROSTENKOWSKI currently fuels his boats. [redacted] stated that, in the 1980's, ROSTENKOWSKI had a pontoon boat, Bayliner, 14 foot Starcraft, Jet-Ski, and a row boat, all of which had engines. [redacted] does not know how many boats ROSTENKOWSKI currently owns. b6 b7C

[redacted] stated that ROSTENKOWSKI ran a tab at the TWIN LAKES GARAGE, Twin Lakes, Wisconsin. [redacted] stated that on at least two occasions he had driven one of ROSTENKOWSKI's vehicles to the garage to fill-up with gas. [redacted] stated that TWIN LAKES GARAGE was a full service garage, and when one of ROSTENKOWSKI's vehicles drove up, the gas station attendants would recognize ROSTENKOWSKI's license plates and would put the gas expense on ROSTENKOWSKI's tab. [redacted] does not recall ever having to sign a receipt for the gas that was placed on ROSTENKOWSKI's tab. [redacted] does not know [redacted] and does not know how ROSTENKOWSKI paid his bills due TWIN LAKES GARAGE. b6 b7C

Netsch, the state comptroller, said Edgar can't escape responsibility for the extra pension system set up by the authority's board for top nonunion officials. The extra pensions are funded by the coins motorists toss into toll baskets.

Although the tollway-only pension plan began in July, 1990, six months before Edgar took office, Netsch said it represents the "old-style politics that Jim Edgar claimed he was going to do away with, and he certainly did not."

But an Edgar spokesman said the governor already told the authority board they should get rid of the extra pension system, which was designed to supplement the regular state retirement plan for about 460 nonunion employees.

"The governor has taken action to make sure the tollway authority

...state income tax. Under her plan, the new tax revenue would be used to increase school funding and provide property tax relief.

Illinois Auditor General William Holland uncovered the second pension system earlier this year. Last week, the authority said at least 62 officials have taken lump-sum buyouts from the system since it began.

One of those officials was Robert Hickman, the authority's former executive director and a longtime friend of the governor. Hickman, who retired earlier this year amid controversy over his use of the authority's helicopter and over a no-bid contract awarded to a firm employing his son, collected $83,863.

Edgar replaced Hickman with Ralph Wehner, a transportation professional. Wehner and other officials are examining whether the special pension fund should be restructured or eliminated.

Kotlarz Hit for Nondisclosure

By Ray Long
Staff Writer

A Chicago lawmaker who invested $150,000 in a company doing work with the tollway should have disclosed it on his economic interest statements, the state treasurer charged Thursday.

"If it wasn't on his disclosure form, it should have been," said Patrick Quinn, whose office is custodian of tollway funds. "That's the whole idea of that law."

State Rep. Joseph Kotlarz, a Northwest Side Democrat and former alderman, invested in a Massachusetts-based subcontractor of the company the tollway hired to produce a scanner system known as I-Pass.

Kotlarz could not be reached for comment.

He sat on the Illinois Toll Highway Authority's advisory board from April, 1993, until Wednesday, when he was removed by House Speaker Michael Madigan (D-Chicago). Madigan's spokesman said Kotlarz had asked to be removed in May.

Within four months of joining the advisory board, Kotlarz had invested $50,000 in AT/Comm Inc. and later invested the rest, the company said.

In a brief statement, a spokesman said the attorney general's office is not investigating Kotlarz or the toll highway authority.

Opera Center Chief to Retire

Andrew Foldi, director of the Lyric Opera Center for American Artists, has announced his retirement effective August, 1995.

Foldi, 68, has been the director of the Opera Center, the Lyric's resident training center, since 1991.

The center offers year-round education and performance opportunities for young American singers. Its nine to 12 ensemble members are chosen from more than 400 who audition.

Foldi cited the physical demands of his position as his reason for retiring.

"During Andrew Foldi's all-too-brief but most fruitful tenure here, the Opera Center has achieved new levels of artistic achievement and prestige," said Ardis Krainik, general director of the Lyric Opera.

Andrew Foldi

A Budapest-born bass-baritone, Foldi began his opera career at the Lyric in the company's first season, 1954. He sang with the Lyric through 1959. In 1974, he returned as Sancho Panza in Nicolai Ghiaurov's "Don Quichotte." Most recently he was seen as Benoit in the 1992-93 production of "La Boheme."

On 10/3/94, [redacted] provided the following information to SA [redacted] b6 b7C b7D

Source stated that he/she believes [redacted] in his capacity as [redacted] is using his position to help the cause of indicted U.S. Congressman DAN ROSTENKOWSKI. Source predicted that no decision would be made by the court on ROSTENKOWSKI's motion until after the November 8, 1994, election day. He/she commented that no information that would make ROSTENKOWSKI look guilty will come out of the court until after the election. Source suspects that [redacted] is "in the middle of" any strategy by the court to minimize the damage to ROSTENKOWSKI's reputation prior to the election. Source indicated that [redacted] may still be able to wield influence over judges in the District of Columbia.

Instructions

Subject Priorities for FBI Arrest or Locates:

A - Subject wanted for crimes of violence (i.e. murder, manslaughter, forcible rape, robbery and aggravated assault) or convicted of such crimes in the past five years.

B - Subjects wanted for crimes involving the loss or destruction of property valued in excess of $25,000 or convicted of such crimes in the past five years.

C - All others

Claiming Non-Federal Arrests, Summonses, Recoveries or Convictions:

It is permissible to claim a local arrest, summons, recovery or conviction if the FBI significantly contributed to the accomplishment. A succinct narrative setting forth the basis for the claim must accompany this report. When claiming a local recovery, enter the word "LOCAL" to the right of the amount. Enter "LF" in the "In-Jail" block for all life sentences and "CP" for capital punishment sentences.

Reporting Convictions:

Convictions should not be reported until the sentence has been issued. There are two exceptions to this rule. The conviction information can be submitted by itself if:

1. The subject becomes a fugitive after conviction but prior to sentencing.
2. The subject dies after conviction but prior to sentencing.

An explanation is required in the Remarks section for either of the above exceptions.

Rule 20 Situations:

The field office that obtained the process (normally the office of origin) is the office that should claim the conviction, not the office where the subject enters the plea in cases involving Rule 20 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedures.

Investigative Assistance or Techniques (IA/Ts) Used:

-Since more than one IA/T could have contributed to the accomplishment, each IA/T used must be rated.

-The IA/T used must be rated each time an accomplishment is claimed. (For example - if informant information was the basis for a complaint, an arrest, a recovery and a conviction and if separate FD-515s are submitted for each of the aforementioned accomplishments, the "Informant Information" block must be rated on each FD-515 even if it was the same information that contributed to all the accomplishments.)

Race Codes:

C = Chinese; I = Indian/American; J = Japanese; B = Black; O = All other; U = Unknown; W = White

FROM 1976 THROUGH 1987, RUSSO WAS PAID APPROXIMATELY $90,000 IN SALARY FROM THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT. INVESTIGATION HAS SHOWN, HOWEVER, THAT SALARY RECEIVED BY RUSSO FOR DISTRICT OFFICE WORK IN REALITY WAS PAYMENT FOR CLEANING SERVICES PROVIDED BY RUSSO'S WIFE, IRENE RUSSO, TO ROSTENKOWSKI'S PERSONAL RESIDENCE IN CHICAGO DURING THE SAME TIME PERIOD. IT IS FURTHER BELIEVED THAT A PORTION OF THE MONIES PAID TO ROBERT RUSSO WAS "KICKED BACK" TO ROSTENKOWSKI. IT IS ANTICIPATED THAT THIS INDICTMENT COULD OCCUR AS EARLY AS 1/31/95.

ADDITIONALLY, A STATUS HEARING BEFORE JUDGE NORMA HOLLOWAY JOHNSON HAS BEEN SCHEDULED FOR 1/25/95, REGARDING THE PREVIOUS INDICTMENT OF JAMES NEDRA. IT IS ANTICIPATED THAT A TRIAL DATE FOR NEDRA WILL BE SET DURING THIS HEARING.

[redacted] was asked to describe his relationship with IRENE and ROBERT RUSSO, who reside at 119 W. Park Avenue, Twin Lakes, Wisconsin. [redacted] indicate that [redacted], (nee. [redacted], is [redacted] and [redacted] ROBERT RUSSO.

[redacted] stated that he has done construction and remodeling work for IRENE and ROBERT RUSSO at 119 W. Park Avenue, Twin Lakes, Wisconsin. [redacted] stated that the checks that were written by the RUSSOs to him were for the materials he used and a small portion for his labor. [redacted] stated that he built shelves in the garage, tore down a wall separating the living room and an enclosed front porch, and framed and finished a closet in a bedroom for the RUSSOs. [redacted] also stated that he did exterior siding work at 119 W. Park Avenue, but indicated that the UNDERWOODs paid him for that work.

[redacted] has no information regarding the RUSSOs employment with DAN ROSTENKOWSKI, and [redacted] stated that the RUSSOs never spoke to him about their relationship with ROSTENKOWSKI.

[redacted], Social Security Number [redacted] work address [redacted], was interviewed at the Offices of the FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION, and was accompanied by her Attorney [redacted] After being advised of the identities of the interviewing Agents and the nature of the interview, [redacted] provided the following information: b6 b7C

[redacted] provided the interviewing Agents with various copies of tax documents regarding the partnership identified as VERNE-LYN REAL ESTATE (VLRE). The tax documents ranged in years from 1978 to 1985, but did not include tax information from 1979 through 1982. [redacted] also provided a copy of a (HUD-1) U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development, Settlement Statement, dated 7/29/86, regarding the sale of 1368 W. Evergreen, Chicago, Illinois. All of the above documents were placed into the 1A Exhibit Section of this file. b6 b7C

Based on [redacted] review of the above documents [redacted] indicated that the VLRE partnership was started in 1978, as opposed to the 1980's, as previously indicated. The partnership remained in effect from 1978 until 1986 when the partnership was dissolved. [redacted] reiterated that the VLRE partnership was entered into by [redacted] and [redacted] for the explicit purpose of managing 1368 W. Evergreen, Chicago, Illinois. b6 b7C

[redacted] stated that [redacted] had a joint checking account for the VLRE partnership, but [redacted] could not recall what bank held the account. [redacted] indicated that VLRE got the loan for the purchase of 1368 W. Evergreen, Chicago, Illinois, through GLADSTONE NATIONAL BANK; but [redacted] could not recall where the joint checking account was held. b6 b7C including the basement, contained three apartments. Varying degrees of apartment renovations were performed by, or on behalf of, [redacted] In order to describe what work was completed and who completed it, [redacted] separated 1368 W. Evergreen, Chicago, Illinois, into three sections: front, middle and back. The front section referred to the four apartments from the third floor to the basement that faced Evergreen Street, and the back apartments referred to the four apartments from the third floor to the basement that faced the alley.

[redacted] stated that 1368 W. Evergreen, Chicago, Illinois, was renovated from 1979 until a few months prior to its sale in 1986.

[redacted] stated that [redacted] had disagreements on what should be done to the apartments and what types of materials should be used in the renovation. It was because of these disagreements that [redacted] hired different carpenters to work on different apartments at 1368 W. Evergreen, Chicago, Illinois.

[redacted] renovated the back apartments and [redacted] renovated three of the front apartments with the exception of the basement apartment. The basement apartment was totally gutted, and no work was completed on it, prior to the sale of 1368 W. Evergreen, Chicago, Illinois, in 1986. The middle apartments were renovated in part by [redacted] hired [redacted] hired [redacted] to complete renovations which they could not complete themselves.

[redacted] stated that she had no control over [redacted] and had no idea how [redacted] got paid for the work he had completed at 1368 W. Evergreen. [redacted] stated that [redacted] worked solely for [redacted] and [redacted] did no work on the interior of any of the rooms that [redacted] had renovated. [redacted] stated that she had seen [redacted] working in the front apartments, and described [redacted] work as beautiful, excellent, and the work of a craftsman. [redacted] also stated that [redacted] worked at a slower than average pace as compared to [redacted], but when [redacted] was asked to identify what work [redacted] had done on the apartments, [redacted] indicated that she couldn't remember.

[redacted] stated that she was at 1368 W. Evergreen, Chicago, Illinois, every weekday morning, quite often during lunch time, and almost every evening. [redacted] also stated that she would spend some of her weekends at 1368 W. Evergreen, Chicago, Illinois. [redacted] however, stated that she wasn't at 1368 W. Evergreen, Chicago, Illinois, enough to remember what [redacted] did at 1368 W. Evergreen. [redacted] stated that she would only see [redacted] in passing, and didn't spend her time talking with [redacted] did not know if [redacted] was working for [redacted] on a full-time or part-time basis. [redacted] however, did recall one occasion when she surprised [redacted] who was playing putt-putt in one of the front apartments.

[redacted] stated that [redacted] had all the windows replaced at 1368 W. Evergreen, Chicago, Illinois. [redacted] recalled seeing [redacted] installing some of the windows, but [redacted] did not know if [redacted] installed all the windows at 1368 W. Evergreen, Chicago, Illinois. [redacted] stated however that she never saw anyone else but [redacted] installing windows at 1368 W. Evergreen, Chicago, Illinois.

[redacted] was asked if she had ever seen anyone else, other than [redacted] doing work for [redacted] at 1368 W. Evergreen, Chicago, Illinois. [redacted] could only recall one occasion when she saw two unknown individuals shoveling plaster into a closet.

[redacted] provided no additional information regarding [redacted] work at 1368 W. Evergreen, Chicago, Illinois. [redacted] stated that [redacted] had wood floors put into the front apartments, but [redacted] could not recall if [redacted] had done the work.

[redacted] stated that [redacted] did the following work for her at 1368 W. Evergreen: [redacted] moved all the gas meters from the hallways and installed them in the attic, [redacted] installed a new water heater and furnace which included the installation of twelve heating units and new duct work for the entire building, and [redacted] installed glass block in the bathroom windows of the building. [redacted] also installed new bathtubs, toilets, kitchen and bathroom sinks, and carpet in the back apartments.

[redacted] stated that she painted the back bedrooms on the first and second floor, did some painting in the basement, put up drywall in some of the apartments, put up flowered paneling on the back stairway and its landings, and put up ceramic tile in the middle bathrooms. [redacted] stated that [redacted] assisted in putting up ceramic tiles in the middle bathrooms, and [redacted] wallpapered some of the apartments.

[redacted] did not know if building permits were obtained for the work done at 1368 W. Evergreen, Chicago, Illinois. [redacted] did not know if building permits were required for the work done at 1368 W. Evergreen, Chicago, Illinois. [redacted] did not know if 1368 W. Evergreen, Chicago, Illinois, was inspected by City Inspectors after the remodeling was completed.

[redacted] stated that in late 1985, her relationship with [redacted] had deteriorated and [redacted] wanted to sell 1368 W. Evergreen, Chicago, Illinois. [redacted] stated that she hired [redacted] a real estate agent for GOLDBERG REAL ESTATE, Chicago, Illinois, to find a buyer. [redacted] stated that [redacted] found two buyers who wanted to purchase 1368 W. Evergreen, Chicago, Illinois, for $295,000, but [redacted] wouldn't sign the sales contract. [redacted] stated that [redacted] was out of the country for a unspecified time period, and the sales contract expired. [redacted] stated that approximately January, 1986, [redacted] of 1368 W. Evergreen, Chicago, Illinois, offered [redacted] and [redacted] $190,000 for 1368 W. Evergreen.

[redacted] verified that 1368 W. Evergreen, Chicago, Illinois, was sold to [redacted] on July 29, 1986, and [redacted] indicated that she received approximately $54,000 on the sale, while ROSTENKOWSKI received approximately $102,000 to $105,000.

[redacted] identified the following people that were residents of 1368 W. Evergreen, Chicago, Illinois, while it was being renovated: [redacted] (phonetic), [redacted] (phonetic) first names unknown, and [redacted] stated that [redacted] had been a tenant at 1368 W. Evergreen, Chicago, Illinois, before and after [redacted] and [redacted] owned the property.

[redacted] also identified SOPHIE PALASZ as a person who might have information regarding [redacted] work at 1368 W. Evergreen, Chicago, Illinois. [redacted] stated that PALASZ, on a daily basis, use to sit outside her residence located next door to 1368 W. Evergreen, Chicago, Illinois, and PALASZ would occasionally comment on the work that was being done at 1368 W. Evergreen, Chicago, Illinois.

At the conclusion of this interview, [redacted] expressed concerns about reprisals from DAN ROSTENKOWSKI because of her assistance in this matter. [redacted] stated that she owns a number of buildings in the City of Chicago, and DAN ROSTENKOWSKI could talk to City Inspectors who could begin to enforce building code violations that could put her out of business. [redacted] stated that she wanted it noted that her Chicago properties have no outstanding building code violations, and all the past building code violations for her buildings had been cleared.

Synopsis: Continued assistance for lead coverage is requested of the Chicago Division.

Details: For information of Chicago, the need continues for assistance in covering leads within the Chicago Division, on an as needed basis until such time as the Rostenkowski trial commences. Currently trial is scheduled for May, 1996, however, additional delays are very possible.

SA [redacted] has conducted an extraordinary amount of investigation in the Chicago area thus far, and WMFO is very appreciative of the manner in which leads have been covered, especially given the sensitivity of this matter and unrealistic deadlines which are often imposed by the U.S. Attorney's Office prosecuting this case.

In view of this, and the anticipation of additional investigation which will be required, it is requested that Chicago assign an agent to continue covering future leads until this matter has been successfully completed. If at all possible, it is requested that SA [redacted] continue with this assignment due to his familiarity and knowledge of the investigation.

FBI, MM, HAS REVIEWED ITS FILES CONCERNING [redacted]

[redacted], AND DAN ROSTENKOWSKI, AND THEIR ASSOCIATION TO ORGANIZED CRIME.

DURING THE PERIOD OF FEBRUARY 1994 THROUGH SEPTEMBER 1994, MM DIVISION CONDUCTED AN INVESTIGATION ENTITLED, [redacted]; ET AL; OC/DI-LCN-GENOVESE FAMILY AND GAMBINO FAMILY; 281A-MM-67889, OPENED PURSUANT TO INFORMATION OBTAINED FROM A COOPERATING WITNESS (CW). THE CW FURNISHED INFORMATION THAT GAMBINO LCN SOLDIER, [redacted] GENOVESE SOLDIER, [redacted] GAMBINO LCN ASSOCIATE, [redacted] LUCHESE LCN ASSOCIATE, [redacted] AND OTHER LCN ASSOCIATES, WERE INVOLVED IN A LARGE SCALE MONEY LAUNDERING AND MULTI-MILLION DOLLAR SPORTS BETTING OPERATION. AT THE TIME, THE CW [redacted] AND [redacted] THE SOUTH FLORIDA OPERATION FROM FOUR OFFICES LOCATED IN AN APARTMENT BUILDING IN HOLLYWOOD, FLORIDA. THESE OFFICES WERE PART OF A NATIONWIDE BOOKMAKING AND MONEY LAUNDERING OPERATION, WHICH WERE STRATEGICALLY PLACED IN CHICAGO, NEW YORK, AND SANTO DOMINGO. ACCORDING TO THE CW, [redacted], AND [redacted] [redacted] UNION OFFICIALS OF THE DISTILLERY WORKERS UNION, LOCAL 103, AFL-CIO, CHICAGO, IL, WERE FINANCING THE OPERATION, AND

b6
b7D

USED SEVERAL OF THE BUSINESSES, IN WHICH THEY HAD INFLUENCE, TO LAUNDER THE GAMBLING PROCEEDS. ONE CORPORATION IDENTIFIED BY THE CW WAS THE WINDY CITY MAINTENANCE, LOCATED IN CHICAGO, IL.

THE CW ADVISED THAT [redacted] b6 b7C b7D [redacted] THESE MONIES WERE ALLEGEDLY PROFITS FROM THE GAMBLING OPERATION. THE CW ESTIMATED THAT THE GAMBLING OPERATION WAS MAKING APPROXIMATELY $2.6 MILLION DOLLARS PER WEEK.

DURING FEBRUARY 1994, THE CW ADVISED THAT ILLINOIS CONGRESSMAN DAN ROSTENKOWSKI WAS A CLOSE FRIEND OF THE [redacted] AND A REGULAR BETTOR IN THE [redacted] BOOKMAKING OPERATION. DURING THE WEEK OF DECEMBER 12, 1993, ROSTENKOWSKI STAYED AT [redacted] APARTMENT IN [redacted] AT [redacted] b6 b7C b7D [redacted] THIS INFORMATION PREDATED THE CW'S COOPERATION WITH THE FBI, AND WAS UNCORROBORATED. CW ALSO ADVISED THAT ROSTENKOWSKI WAS

[redacted] b3 Title 18, U.S.C., Section 3123

DURING MAY 1995 THROUGH JULY 1995, PEN REGISTER LINES WERE MAINTAINED ON FOUR SEPARATE GAMBLING TELEPHONES, AS WELL AS [redacted] HOME TELEPHONE [redacted] FOR A SIXTY DAY PERIOD. PEN REGISTERS WERE UNABLE TO CORROBORATE ANY CONTACT WITH ROSTENKOWSKI. CONSENSUAL RECORDINGS MADE BY THE CW WERE ALSO UNABLE TO CORROBORATE THE CONGRESSMAN'S INVOLVEMENT IN ANY ILLEGAL ACTIVITIES.

ULTIMATELY, A CONFLICT AROSE BETWEEN [redacted] AND [redacted] CONCERNING THE DIVISION OF THE GAMBLING PROFITS. IN ADDITION, ROOF PROBLEMS IN THE GAMBLING OFFICES FORCED THE OPERATION TO BE RELOCATED TO A NEW, UNKNOWN LOCATION. THE CW [redacted]

b7D

[redacted] ACCORDING TO THE CW, [redacted] CONTINUED OPERATING HIS GAMBLING ROOMS IN CHICAGO.

[redacted] AND THE LACK OF CORROBORATION OBTAINED DURING THE PEN REGISTER COVERAGE AND FROM CONSENSUAL RECORDINGS, MM WAS UNABLE TO SUBSTANTIATE THE STATEMENTS MADE BY THE CW. DURING SEPTEMBER 1994, THE CASE WAS CLOSED AND NO FURTHER INFORMATION HAS BEEN OBTAINED CONCERNING THE [redacted] OR

NGTON POST

Judge Orders Rostenkowski To Report to Prison July 22

By Toni Locy
Washington Post Staff Writer

Former representative Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) was ordered yesterday to report to a federal medical prison in Rochester, Minn., July 22 to begin serving a 17-month sentence.

Rostenkowski, 68, who underwent prostate surgery last month, wanted to report to a federal prison in Oxford, Wis., which is closer to his native Chicago.

U.S. District Judge Norma Holloway Johnson granted him the extra time to recuperate but refused to allow him to report to Oxford. She told defense attorney Thomas Buchanan that the Bureau of Prisons, not Rostenkowski, will decide if and when he can do his time at the Wisconsin prison.

Johnson also said a probation office report done since Rostenkowski's sentencing in April shows he can afford to pay for the costs of his incarceration.

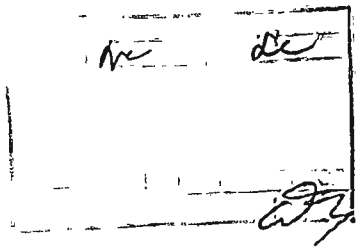
"It appears to me, without any doubt, that the former congressman will be paying his own way," she said. "I don't see any reason under the sun why he shouldn't be paying his way. With his retirement from the Congress, he can pay his way, plus."

Rostenkowski was not present at yesterday's hearing.

A spokesman for the Bureau of Prisons said the average cost of incarceration is $21,352 a year.

Rostenkowski, former chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, pleaded guilty in April to two counts of mail fraud in a case in which he was accused of misusing his office and its perks for decades.

On the courthouse steps after the sentencing, he lashed out at prosecutors and portrayed himself as a victim who did nothing different than any other member of Congress.



Originally, Rostenkowski was supposed to begin serving his sentence June 17.

But the judge agreed to change the reporting date after doctors at Walter Reed Army Medical Center removed Rostenkowski's prostate May 16.

Re: HEREIU Consulting Agreement With Dan Rostenkowski

Dear [redacted]

The purpose of this letter is to confirm our understanding that the Hotel Employees and Restaurant Employees International Union ("HEREIU") has had, or continues to have, a consulting arrangement with former Representative Dan Rostenkowski (hereinafter referred to as "Rostenkowski") and/or his company, Danross Associates, Inc. ("Danross"), and to notify you that, in our view, Rostenkowski is disqualified from acting as a consultant to the HEREIU pursuant to 29 U.S.C. § 504.

1. Rostenkowski's Mail Fraud Conviction

As you are undoubtedly aware, by an agreement dated March 27, 1996, Rostenkowski pled guilty to two counts of violating the mail fraud statute, 18 U.S.C. §§ 1341 and 1346, and was sentenced by United States District Court Judge Norman Holloway Johnson to 17 months imprisonment, $100,000 in restitution, and, possibly, the cost of his incarceration. During sentencing, Judge Holloway reportedly stated that Rostenkowski's actions amounted to a "reprehensible" breach of trust as a Member of Congress.

2. Consulting Arrangement Between the HEREIU and Rostenkowski

It is our understanding that the HEREIU has had, or continues to have, a consulting arrangements with Danross and/or Rostenkowski, and that Rostenkowski has provided consulting services to the HEREIU in connection with obtaining a neutrality agreement relating to certain unorganized employees of the Universal Studios Theme Park in Orlando, Florida. Please inform me, in writing, concerning: (1) whether the HEREIU continues to have a consulting agreement or arrangement with Danross and/or Rostenkowski; (2) the nature of services performed by Danross and/or Rostenkowski for the HEREIU; and (3) whether the HEREIU has paid Danross and/or Rostenkowski for any consulting services and, if so, when such payments were made, in what amount, and whether any additional monies are owed Danross and/or Rostenkowski for services rendered to the HEREIU.

3. The Application of 29 U.S.C. § 504 To Rostenkowski

In our view, 29 U.S.C. § 504 makes Rostenkowski ineligible to provide services as a consultant, labor relations consultant, or advisor to the HEREIU due to his conviction for mail fraud for a period of 13 years after his conviction, or end of imprisonment, whichever is later. Persons who "willfully and knowingly hire, retain, employ, or otherwise place any other person to serve in any capacity in violation" of § 504 are subject to a fine, imprisonment for not more than 5 years, or both.

Although mail fraud is not one of the crimes listed in § 504, the federal courts have long held that § 504 is not limited to the crimes enumerated therein, but, rather, should be broadly construed in view of its remedial purpose. In Serio v. Liss, 300 F.2d 386 (3d Cir. 1961), the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit held that a business agent was properly disqualified from holding office under Section 504 due to his conviction for atrocious assault and battery stating:

> We believe that Congress intended the provisions of Section 504(a) to have an antiseptic and purifying effect on the conduct of union affairs by union officials and officers and made clear that an individual with a criminal record should not be employed in a position of union responsibility until he had reestablished his probity. . . .

Id. at 389.

Since Serio v. Liss, the federal courts have routinely held that § 504 should be broadly construed to prevent persons with criminal records from acting as officers, agents, or representatives of, or consultants or advisors, to unions. In Berman v. Local 107, International Bro. of Teamsters, 237 F. Supp. 767 (1964), for example, the court held that Mr. Berman's conviction for the Pennsylvania crime of conspiracy to cheat and defraud disqualified him as a candidate for the office of business agent of the IBT, concluding that the crime was the equivalent of either embezzlement or grand larceny under § 504. Similarly, in Lippi v. Thomas, 298 F. Supp. 242 (M.D. Pa. 1969), the court held that the plaintiff was not eligible to have his name placed on the ballot for President of District I of the United Mine Workers, stating that § 504 should be liberally interpreted to encompass willful misapplication of bank funds in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 656, a crime not enumerated in § 504. In so holding, the court relied upon the fact that "[a]ll of the reported cases . . . read Section 504(a) in a broad fashion so as to include crimes not specifically enumerated." Id. at 247. See, also, Postma v. International Brotherhood of Teamsters, 337 F. 2d 609 (3d Cir. 1964) (Section 504(a)'s reference to "extortion" encompasses federal and state offenses of extortion); United States v. Priore, 236 F. Supp. 542 (E.D.N.Y. 1964) (State crime of conspiracy to commit extortion is within the scope of § 504 irrespective of whether a misdemeanor or a felony).

In Illario v. Frawley, 426 F. Supp. 1132 (D.N.J. 1977), the court held that plaintiff's plea of guilty to an accusation charging that he knowingly and intentionally obtained money by means of false statements and representations fell within the scope of § 504 despite the fact that the crime was unrelated to the conduct of plaintiff's union affairs. The court relied upon the fact that the "[c]ourts are agreed that the enumeration of offenses in § 504 was intended to be generic and inclusive, rather than specific and exclusive." According to the court in Illario, "the test is . . . whether the conduct described in the accusation was conduct which Congress intended to suppress". Id. at 1140.

The courts have also broadly construed § 504 to encompass nonenumerated crimes in more recent decisions. See, e.g., United Union of Roofers, etc., No. 33 v. Meese, 823 F.2d 652 (1st Cir. 1987) (Held that misdemeanor conviction for violating labor statute forbidding the use of force or violence to intimidate union members in exercise of their rights disqualified plaintiff from holding office under § 504, stating that "[t]o interpret the disqualification list . . . other than as a list of generic descriptions would undercut [the] basic purpose" of § 504); Petition of Belpedio, 753 F. Supp. 239 (N.D. Ill. (1990) (Section 504 applied to local union official convicted of felony aggravated battery during a touch football game since Congress didn't intend to "limit the directive of Section 504(a) to crimes which occur in circumstances related to union activity" or which "raise the question of . . . trustworthiness").

In routinely holding that Section 504 encompasses nonenumerated crimes, the courts have relied upon the legislative history of Section 504 of the Labor Management Reporting and Disclosure Act, 29 U.S.C. § 401, et seq.. See, e.g., 105 Cong. Rec. 6410 (1959)(statement of Sen. Ervin) (Congress wanted to disqualify persons convicted of "serious crimes" from union office); 105 Cong. Rec. 7021 (statement of Sen. Kennedy) (Congress intended to establish "strong barriers against the control of unions by unreformed convicted thieves, racketeers, and thugs"); 29 U.S.C. §.401 (". . . in order to accomplish the objective of a free flow of commerce it is essential that labor organizations, employers, and their officials adhere to the highest standards of responsibility and ethical conduct in administering the affairs of their organizations, particularly as they affect labor-management relations"); Illario v. Frawley, 426 F. Supp. 1132 ("The intense concern that Congress felt over criminal activity on the part of labor leaders is reflected throughout the legislative history of the measure") (citations omitted).

Rostenkowski's plea agreement, and the government's factual proffer in support thereof, make apparent that the mail fraud conviction disqualifies Rostenkowski from serving as a consultant, labor relations consultant, or advisor to the HEREIU under § 504. According to the proffer, Rostenkowski admitted to misappropriating and misusing United States funds by using the congressional payroll to pay persons who performed personal services for Rostenkowski or members of his family and by ordering merchandise from the House Stationery Store which he used as personal gifts to family, friends and political associates. There can be no doubt that Rostenkowski's criminal activity is of the type Congress intended to reach under § 504 in order to insure that the affairs of unions, like the HEREIU, would not be influenced by persons convicted of serious crimes.

4. The Application of the Consent Decree to Rostenkowski

As a disqualified person under § 504, Rostenkowski is also a "barred person" within the meaning of ¶ 7(b) of the Consent Decree. Accordingly, the HEREIU and its officers, agents, employees, and representatives are permanently enjoined from "knowingly associating" with Rostenkowski, or from permitting Rostenkowski to exercise "any control or influence directly or indirectly, in any way or degree", in the conduct of the HEREIU's affairs. See Consent Decree, ¶ 5.

In sum, I trust the HEREIU intends to formally sever any consulting arrangements it may have with Rostenkowski as required by § 504 and request that you provide me with a written response to this letter at your earliest convenience.

Feel free to provide Mr. Rostenkowski or his attorneys with a copy of this letter, if you so desire.

Sincerely yours,

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
DISTRICT OF NEW JERSEY

Hon. Garrett E. Brown, Jr.
Civil Action No. 95-4596 (GEB)

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Plaintiff,
v.
HOTEL EMPLOYEES AND RESTAURANT EMPLOYEES INTERNATIONAL UNION, Nominal Defendant, and
THE GENERAL EXECUTIVE BOARD OF THE HOTEL EMPLOYEES AND RESTAURANT EMPLOYEES INTERNATIONAL UNION, Defendant.

CONSENT DECREE

WHEREAS, the United States of America, through its counsel, Faith S. Hochberg, United States Attorney for the District of New Jersey has filed a Complaint seeking equitable relief under 18 U.S.C. § 1964 ("RICO");

WHEREAS, the parties have agreed to resolve the issues raised in the Complaint by way of settlement in order to avoid the costs of litigation, without any express or implied admission of liability or fault by or on the part of the defendants as to any of the allegations or matters contained in the Complaint;

WHEREAS, defendants acknowledge that historically, the Hotel Employees and Restaurant Employees International Union (hereinafter the "HEREIU" or the "union") and various constituent entities of the union (which are referred to hereinafter as including HEREIU Districts, District Councils, local unions and other "subordinate bodies" of HEREIU as that term is defined in the HEREIU Constitution, but which do not include the HEREIU Pension and Health and Welfare Funds) have suffered from an externally induced corruption problem;

WHEREAS, the United States of America and the HEREIU agree that within the HEREIU and its constituent entities, inter alia: (a) any vestiges of an externally induced corruption problem should be eliminated; (b) union democracy should be promoted and protected; (c) integrity in every aspect of the operations of the HEREIU and its constituent entities, should be fostered; and (d) the entire membership should be fairly represented;

WHEREAS, the United States of America and the HEREIU agree that the HEREIU and its constituent entities should be free from the influence of organized crime and other corrupting elements;

WHEREAS, the HEREIU, through the resolution of its General Executive Board (acting as representative of the union and its membership), has consented to the consolidation of this action with United States v. Hanley, et al. and has additionally consented to entry of this Consent Decree; and

WHEREAS, the parties have conferred and have devised a method to achieve the remedial objective described herein in the least expensive manner possible:

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED, ADJUDGED AND DECREED as follows:

JURISDICTION

1. The Court has exclusive jurisdiction over the subject matter herein and over the parties hereto. The Complaint states a cause of action under RICO. The Court shall retain jurisdiction over the parties and signatories to this Consent Decree and the subject matter of this litigation in order to implement the terms and provisions of this Consent Decree. If the Monitor, any party, or other person or entity files any separate action pursuant to this Consent Decree, such action shall be designated a related action pursuant to Rule 11D of the General Rules of this Court. The Court shall have exclusive jurisdiction to decide any and all issues and disputes arising from the interpretation or application of this Consent Decree until further order of this Court. The United States shall have the right to intervene in the event there is a dispute regarding any interpretation or application of this Consent Decree.

2. This Consent Decree is binding upon all persons who have or may have any connection to the HEREIU and its constituent entities, including, but not limited to, current and future officers, agents, employees, representatives, members and persons holding positions of trust in the HEREIU and its constituent entities.

REMEDIAL OBJECTIVE

3. The remedial objective of this Consent Decree is that the HEREIU and its constituent entities be free from the direct or indirect influence of any organized crime group or the threat of such influence now and in the future.

DUTIES OF HEREIU OFFICIALS

4. All officers and other persons holding positions of trust in the HEREIU and its constituent entities, with due regard to the remedial objective of this action, have a heightened fiduciary duty to the membership in insuring the independence and the integrity of the union free from corruption and the influence of criminal groups as well as promoting democratic participation of union members in union affairs as guaranteed by the Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act (the "LMRDA").

INJUNCTIVE PROHIBITIONS

5. All current and future officers, agents, employees, representatives, and persons holding positions of trust in the HEREIU and its constituent entities as well as all current and future members of the HEREIU and its constituent entities are permanently enjoined:

a. from committing any crime listed in 18 U.S.C. § 1961(1);

b. from knowingly associating with any member or associate of any criminal group or with any barred person;

c. from knowingly permitting any member or associate of any criminal group or any barred person to exercise any control or influence, directly or indirectly, in any way or degree, in the conduct of the affairs of the HEREIU and its constituent entities; and

d. from obstructing or otherwise interfering, directly or indirectly, with the efforts of anyone effectuating or attempting to effectuate the terms of this Consent Decree or in attempting to prevent any criminal groups or barred person from exercising influence on the conduct of the affairs of the HEREIU and its constituent entities.

6. As used in this Consent Decree, the term "knowingly associating" shall mean that: (a) an enjoined party knows or should know that the person with whom he or she is associating is a member or associate of any criminal group or is a barred person; and (b) the association is more than fleeting.

7. As used in this Consent Decree a "barred person" is: (a) any member or associate of any organized crime family or other criminal group, or (b) any person prohibited from participating in union affairs pursuant to or by operation of this Consent Decree or other court order or statute.

COURT-APPOINTED MONITOR

8. The United States and HEREIU hereby recommend to the Court that Kurt Muellenberg, Esquire be appointed as Monitor of the HEREIU. In the event that Court desires to appoint a different individual as Monitor of the HEREIU, the Monitor shall be selected by the Court from a list of proposed candidates to be jointly submitted to the Court by Counsel for the United States and the HEREIU. Said parties shall submit additional jointly proposed candidates to the Court upon its request.

GENERAL POWERS

9. The Monitor, in addition to the powers described elsewhere in this Consent Decree, shall have the power to:

a. investigate, audit and review all aspects of the HEREIU and its constituent entities to advance the remedial objective of this action. These powers shall include the power of the Monitor to conduct investigatory interviews and sworn depositions to advance the remedial objective of this action;

b. request the United States Attorney or any agency of the United States to provide legal, audit and investigative personnel to assist in the execution of the Monitor's duties. For instance, the Monitor may request the United States Attorney to seek additional relief from the Court in order to protect or advance the interests of the union in achieving the remedial objective of this action. The expense of such assistance will be borne by the United States and will not be chargeable to the union;

c. retain legal, investigative, accounting and other support personnel at the HEREIU's expense and delegate any of his / her powers or duties to such persons, where, in the Monitor's discretion, such personnel and delegation are necessary to execute the Monitor's duties as set forth herein;

d. attend all HEREIU Executive Board meetings and HEREIU committee meetings (with the exception of bargaining committee meetings);

e. refer matters to the HEREIU or the United States Attorney for appropriate action;

f. perform all such functions and duties not specifically enumerated herein in order to fulfill his/her duties as Monitor.

REVIEW AUTHORITY

10. Whenever the Monitor reasonably believes that any of the following actions, proposed actions, or omissions to act (a) may violate the injunctive prohibitions of this Consent Decree, (b) may constitute any crime involving labor organizations or employee benefit plans, or (c) may further the direct or indirect influence of any organized crime group or the threat of such influence now or in the future, he or she has the power to:

i. disapprove the hiring, appointment, reassignment or discharge of any person or business entity by the HEREIU or its constituent entities; and

ii. disapprove or terminate any contract (including, but not limited to, contracts with service providers or vendors), lease, or other obligation of the HEREIU or its constituent entities.

11. The HEREIU may appeal the Monitor's actions made pursuant to Paragraphs 10 (i) and (ii) of this Consent Decree by filing a written appeal of such action with the Monitor within twenty (20) days of such decision by the Monitor. Only the HEREIU may appeal an action by the Monitor under Paragraphs 10 (i) and (ii) and any action by the Monitor which is not appealed in accordance with this Paragraph may not be appealed or otherwise challenged. The Monitor shall issue a written decision regarding any such action within twenty (20) days after he/she receives such appeal. The Monitor's decision, all papers or other material relied upon by the Monitor and the papers filed or issued pursuant to this appeal procedure shall constitute the exclusive record for review. The Monitor's decisions pursuant to this Paragraph shall be reviewed by this Court, if necessary, under the substantial evidence standard set forth in 5 U.S.C. § 706(2)(E). Materials considered by the Monitor but withheld from the HEREIU and the public which contain sensitive information provided by a law enforcement agency shall be submitted to the Court for ex parte, in camera consideration and shall remain sealed. The United States may seek the Court's review of the Monitor's action or failure to act in matters covered in Paragraph 10.

DISCIPLINARY POWERS

a. The Monitor shall have the right and power to remove, suspend, expel, fine or forfeit the benefits (with the exception of vested employee retirement benefits subject to title I of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act—29 U.S.C. § 1001, et seq.) of any officer, representative, agent, employee or person holding a position of trust in the HEREIU and its constituent entities when such person engages or has engaged in actions or inactions which (i) violate the injunctive prohibitions of this Consent Decree, (ii) violate any criminal law involving the operation of a labor organization or employee benefit plan, or (iii) further the direct or indirect influence of any organized crime group or the threat of such influence now or in the future.

b. Any officer, agent, representative, employee or person holding a position of trust in the HEREIU or its constituent entities who is named as a defendant in an indictment or other charging document accusing him or her of any crime relating to the conduct of the affairs of a labor organization or employee benefit plan shall be placed on temporary leave of absence, without pay, by HEREIU, or the constituent entity having employment authority over such person, during the pendency of the matter and an investigation shall be undertaken to determine if discipline should be imposed in accordance with this paragraph. In the event that the charge(s) in such documents is not sustained, the accused shall be reinstated in office or employment and paid the appropriate salary for the period of suspension during the unexpired term of office or employment which was held at the time of the suspension.

13. Discipline of Members. In addition to the rights and powers set forth in Paragraph 12, the Monitor shall have the right and power to impose discipline up to and including expulsion from union membership when a member of the HEREIU or its constituent entities engages or has engaged in actions or inactions which: (a) violate the injunctive prohibitions of this Consent Decree; (b) violate any criminal law involving the operation of a labor organization or employee benefit plan; or (c) further the direct or indirect influence of any organized crime group or the threat of such influence now or in the future.

14. Disciplinary Procedure. In order to discharge disciplinary duties under this decree, the Monitor shall have the same rights and authority as the HEREIU General President, the HEREIU General Executive Board, and any other officer, agent, employee, or representative of the HEREIU as well as the full authority derived from any and all provisions of law. When exercising his/her disciplinary rights and powers, the Monitor shall afford the subject of the potential disciplinary action written notice of the charge(s) against him/her and an opportunity to be heard. The Monitor shall conduct any hearing on any disciplinary charges, render the final decision regarding whether discipline is appropriate and impose the particular discipline. The charged party shall have 20 days to answer the charges against him/her and may be represented by counsel at any hearing conducted by the Monitor. Any hearing shall be conducted under the rules and procedures generally applicable in labor arbitration proceedings and decisions shall be made using a "just cause" standard. In conducting any hearing, the Monitor shall have the right and power:

a. to administer oaths. All testimony and other evidence shall be subject to penalties of perjury to the same extent as if such evidence was submitted directly to the Court;

b. to examine witnesses or conduct depositions;

c. to receive evidence. The Monitor may receive evidence withheld from the charged party and the public which contains or constitutes sensitive information provided by a law enforcement agency, and can choose what weight, if any, to give such evidence, but in no case shall the identity of a confidential source of law enforcement information be required to be disclosed; and

d. to issue subpoenas requiring the attendance and presentation of testimony of any person and/or the production of documentary or other evidence. Witnesses shall be paid the same fee and mileage allowances which are paid subpoenaed witnesses in the courts of the United States and such payments shall be made by the HEREIU. In the case of contumacy or failure to obey a subpoena issued under this Paragraph, the Monitor may: (i) impose discipline upon the person in accordance with this Consent Decree; and/or (ii) seek an order from the Court requiring the person to testify or to produce documentary or other evidence.

15. Appeal of Disciplinary Action. Any discipline imposed by the Monitor shall be final and binding, subject to review by the Court. A person disciplined by the Monitor pursuant to Paragraphs 12 or 13 may obtain review of the Monitor's decision regarding such discipline by filing a written appeal of such decision with the Court within thirty (30) days of such decision by the Monitor. The Monitor's decision, all papers or other material relied upon by the Monitor and the papers filed or issued pursuant to this appeal procedure shall constitute the exclusive record for review. The Monitor's decisions pursuant to this Paragraph shall be reviewed by this Court, if necessary, under the substantial evidence standard set forth in 5 U.S.C. § 706(2)(E). Materials considered by the Monitor but withheld from the appellant and the public which contain sensitive information provided by a law enforcement agency shall be submitted to the Court for ex parte, in camera consideration and shall remain sealed. The person disciplined by the Monitor may appeal the Monitor's decision regarding the discipline imposed against him/her and any decision by the Monitor regarding discipline imposed against a person which is not appealed in accordance with this Paragraph may not be appealed or otherwise challenged. HEREIU or the United States may seek the Court's review of the Monitor's decision not to impose discipline.

PRIVILEGES AND IMMUNITIES

16. The HEREIU shall indemnify the Monitor and any person hired by or acting on his or her behalf from such personal liability and costs incurred to defend against any claim of such liability. In addition, the Monitor and any person hired by or acting on his or her behalf shall enjoy whatever immunity from personal liability that may exist under the law for court officers. The Monitor and his designee(s) shall, in addition to the powers and duties enumerated in this Consent Decree, have all of the powers, privileges and immunities of a person appointed pursuant to Rule 66, Fed. R. Civ. Pro. and which are customary for court-appointed offices performing similar assignments.

ACCESS TO INFORMATION

17. The Monitor shall have unfettered access to, and the right to make copies of, all records or documents and officials, agents, employees, and members of the HEREIU and its constituent entities to advance the remedial objective of this action.

18. The Monitor, in his/her discretion, may provide the HEREIU with information he/she has discovered or received except that no confidential or sensitive information from a law enforcement agency may be so provided without approval by the Court on application of the United States. In the event the Monitor discovers or receives information which may indicate that disciplinary action by the HEREIU or one of its constituent entities is warranted, the Monitor may provide that information, subject to the limitation set forth in the previous sentence, to the appropriate HEREIU official, who shall report to the Monitor what action, if any, is taken.

NOTICE TO THE MONITOR

19. The HEREIU shall expeditiously provide the Monitor with prior notice of all HEREIU Executive Board meetings and HEREIU committee meetings (with the exception of bargaining committee meetings) and shall provide the Monitor with the minutes of all HEREIU Executive Board meetings and HEREIU committee meetings.

20. The HEREIU, its constituent entities, and their officers, agents, and representatives, shall expeditiously inform the Monitor about matters involving HEREIU and its constituent entities of importance to the remedial objective of this action including, but not limited to:

a. the discipline of members; officers, representatives, agents, employees or persons holding positions of trust in the HEREIU or its constituent entities;

b. decisions to hire, appoint, reassign or discharge persons as officers, agents, representatives, employees and persons holding positions of trust in HEREIU or its constituent entities, but not including salaried, nonsupervisory office staff and clerical personnel;

c. decisions to pay the expenses of any person or entity who is or may be subject to disciplinary or other action pursuant to this Consent Decree or related to this lawsuit;

d. decisions to hire or employ service providers or vendors in excess of $10,000 per annum;

e. expenditures or proposed expenditures in excess of $10,000;

f. decisions to enter into contracts, leases and other commercial obligations; and

g. any past, present or future action or inaction of a member, officer, representative, agent, employee or person holding a position of trust in the HEREIU or its constituent entities that (i) violates the injunctive prohibitions of this Consent Decree, (ii) constitutes any crime involving labor organizations or employee benefit plans, or (iii) furthers the direct or indirect influence of any organized crime group or the threat of such influence now or in the future.

COMPENSATION

21. The Monitor shall be compensated at a rate to be established by the Court, and shall be diligent in minimizing the cost to the union. The Monitor shall submit to the Court, the HEREIU and the United States Attorney a monthly itemized statement of services rendered. The HEREIU shall establish, maintain and replenish on a monthly basis an escrow fund in the amount of not less than $75,000.00 against which the fees and expenses of the Monitor shall be drawn.

22. In the event that any dispute arises over any aspect of compensation, the HEREIU shall immediately notify the Monitor and the United States Attorney of the precise reasons for contesting the validity of the billing and shall deposit the disputed amount in an interest bearing escrow account until the parties can resolve the dispute or until the Court, upon petition of the United States Attorney, resolves the matter.

REPORTS

23. The Monitor shall report to the Court periodically or when requested by the Court regarding the progress of the HEREIU and its constituent entities in achieving the remedial objective of this action. Every six (6) months after the date of this Consent Decree, the Monitor shall issue a written report to the Court regarding the progress of the HEREIU and its constituent entities in achieving the remedial objective of this action. Copies of such reports shall be provided to the United States Attorney and counsel for the HEREIU.

TERM OF THE MONITOR

24. Except as provided in Paragraph 25, the term of the Monitor shall expire in four (4) years from the date of this Consent Decree. If, at any time, the Monitor resigns, is discharged or becomes disabled from his/her respective duties, the Court shall select a new Monitor from a list of proposed candidates to be jointly submitted to the Court by the parties. The parties shall submit additional jointly agreed upon candidates to the Court upon its request.

25. Public Review Board. The HEREIU through the Executive Board shall create a Public Review Board (PRB) and adopt an Ethical Practices Code (EPC) in accordance with the documents attached to this Consent Decree as Exhibits A and B. Such PRB and EPC shall be presented to the HEREIU convention, scheduled in 1996, and shall be made a part of the HEREIU Constitution. If the PRB is created and an EPC is adopted in accordance with the terms of Exhibits A and B attached to this Consent Decree: (a) the term of the Monitor shall expire within six (6) months of the date the PRB is authorized and the EPC is adopted, or eighteen (18) months from the date this Consent Decree is entered, whichever is later; and (b) immediately after the expiration of the Monitor's term the HEREIU shall appoint the Monitor as a member of the PRB for a period of not less than two (2) years. However, the Monitor shall retain his/her independent authority to resolve to completion and decide all charges filed by him/her on or before the date on which the Monitor is appointed to the PRB.

26. Upon a showing by the United States that there is probable cause to believe that corruption or the influence of organized crime exists in the HEREIU or its constituent entities, the term of the Monitor shall be extended by the Court and the provisions of Paragraph 24 relating to the expiration of the Monitor's term shall be suspended. The Court shall thereafter enter such Order(s) as it deems necessary and proper regarding the continuation, scope or modification of this Consent Decree.

ELECTION PROCEDURES

27. All candidates for elective office in the HEREIU and its constituent entities must be free from corruption and the influence of any criminal group or any barred person. The Monitor shall be advised at least sixteen (16) weeks prior to the HEREIU General Convention, or at least six weeks prior to any General Executive Board meeting at which any vacant office will be filled, of all candidates for elective office in the HEREIU and such candidates shall be reviewed by the Monitor. The Monitor shall be advised at least eight (8) weeks prior to any scheduled or special election of all candidates for elective office in the HEREIU's constituent entities and such candidates may be reviewed by the Monitor. In the event the Monitor discovers information which may indicate that a candidate's election (a) violates or would violate the injunctive prohibitions of this Consent Decree, including permitting a barred person to serve; or (b) is or would be any crime involving labor organizations or employee benefit plans; or (c) furthers or would further the direct or indirect influence of any organized crime group or the threat of such influence now or in the future, the Monitor may disallow the particular nomination or election of the individual.

28. A person disallowed by the Monitor pursuant to Paragraph 27 may appeal the Monitor's action by filing a written appeal of such action with the Monitor within twenty (20) days of such action by the Monitor. The Monitor shall issue to the appellant a written decision regarding the appeal within twenty (20) days after he/she receives such appeal. The Monitor's decision, all papers or other material relied upon by the Monitor and the papers filed or issued pursuant to this appeal procedure shall constitute the exclusive record for review. The Monitor's decisions pursuant to this Paragraph shall be reviewed by this Court, if necessary, under the substantial evidence standard set forth in 5 U.S.C. § 706(2)(E). Materials considered by the Monitor but withheld from the appellant and the public which contain sensitive information provided by a law enforcement agency shall be submitted to the Court for ex parte, in camera consideration and shall remain sealed. A person disallowed by the Monitor may appeal the Monitor's decision regarding his/her candidacy and any decision by the Monitor regarding a person's candidacy which is not appealed in accordance with this Paragraph may not be appealed or otherwise challenged. HEREIU or the United States may seek the Court's review of the Monitor's decision not to disallow a person to seek or obtain elected office.

ADDITIONAL TIME FOR REVIEW

29. In the event the Monitor cannot reasonably obtain the information necessary to render an informed decision within the time periods set forth in Paragraphs 11 or 28, the Monitor may notify the HEREIU or the appealing former candidate that an additional twenty (20) days will be necessary to render an informed decision. In addition, the Monitor and the HEREIU or appealing former candidate may consent to extend the relevant time period. The Court may extend the relevant time period in which the Monitor may render a decision for additional fifteen (15) day periods for good cause shown.

EXPENSES

30. The HEREIU expressly agrees that it shall not authorize payment of expenses (including, but not limited to, expenses for employment of counsel) for any person who is or may be subject to disciplinary or other action pursuant to this Consent Decree or related to this lawsuit unless such person is exonerated of any wrongdoing in connection with such disciplinary or other action.

NOTIFICATION

31. Service of Consent Decree. Within thirty (30) days of entry of this Consent Decree, the HEREIU shall serve a copy of this Consent Decree upon each of its officers, agents, representatives and persons in positions of trust within the HEREIU and shall advise all other HEREIU employees of the existence of this Consent Decree, the fact that they are bound by the provisions of this Consent Decree and the fact that it is available for reference. In addition, within thirty (30) days of entry of this Consent Decree, the HEREIU shall serve a copy of this Consent Decree upon each of its constituent entities with the direction to advise the officers, agents, representatives and employees and persons in positions of trust within each respective constituent entity of the existence of this Consent Decree, the fact that they are bound by the provisions of this Consent Decree and the fact that it is available for reference. Within forty-five (45) days of the date of entry of this Consent Decree, the HEREIU shall provide to the plaintiff and to the Monitor a certification of compliance stating the fact and manner of compliance with this Paragraph and identifying all persons and entities who have been served with a copy of this Consent Decree. The HEREIU expressly agrees that it shall advise all candidates for office and all persons seeking a position as an officer, agent, employee, representative or position of trust of the existence of this Consent Decree, the fact that they are bound by the provisions of this Consent Decree and the fact that it is available for reference.

32. Publication of Consent Decree in the Official Journal. In addition to notice of this Consent Decree by service of copies to the persons and constituent entities described in the preceding paragraph, a copy of the Consent Decree shall be printed in the next issue of HEREIU's official journal which is scheduled to be published following entry of the Consent Decree.

OTHER AUTHORITIES

33. Nothing in this Consent Decree shall abrogate the responsibilities under existing law of (a) the HEREIU or its constituent entities, or (b) the officers, agents, representatives, employees or persons holding positions of trust in the HEREIU or its constituent entities. HEREIU and its General Executive Board hereby agree that the terms of this Consent Decree govern any provision of the HEREIU Constitution which may be inconsistent with the terms of this Consent Decree.

FUTURE ACTION

34. The United States expressly represents and the HEREIU expressly acknowledges that nothing in this Consent Decree precludes the United States or any of its agencies or individual agents from investigating the HEREIU, its constituent entities or any person or entity having any relation to this lawsuit and that nothing herein shall prevent the United States from seeking additional relief in this action or from instituting a civil or criminal action against any person or entity in the future and, in doing so, relying on any evidence or materials utilized in preparation for the present action or realleging any of the allegations made in the present action.

MODIFICATION AND ENFORCEMENT

35. Either party may hereafter make application to the Court to modify or enforce this Consent Decree and the Court may grant such relief as may be equitable and just, having due regard for the purposes of the underlying litigation, the remedial purposes of this Consent Decree and the circumstances at the time of the application. In the context of any such application, the record of all prior proceedings in this matter and in any matter involving the HEREIU, its constituent entities, or an officer, agent, representative, employee, member or person in a position of trust in the HEREIU or one of its constituent entities, shall be admissible to the extent that is necessary to make a fair and just determination of the issue. The Monitor or any party to this Consent Decree may apply to the Court for any order necessary or appropriate to implement this Consent Decree, including orders preventing non-parties from interfering with implementation of the Consent Decree. Upon satisfactory completion and implementation of the terms and conditions of the Decree, this Court shall entertain a joint motion of the parties hereto for entry of judgment dismissing this action with prejudice and without costs to any party. The parties further agree to review the implementation of this Consent Decree, including operation of any Public Review Board and Ethical Practices Code established in accordance with documents attached to this Decree, no later than four (4) years from the date of this Decree.

CONTEMPT OF COURT

36. Willful violation of any restriction or prohibition contained herein, or other disobedience to the mandates of this Consent Decree shall be punishable as a contempt of court.

SEVERABILITY

37. If any provision of this Consent Decree is hereafter determined to be invalid for any reason, the balance of this Consent Decree shall remain in full force and effect.

PRIOR DECREE

38. Nothing in this Consent Decree is to be construed as affecting the validity or operation of the Consent Decree entered on April 12, 1991 in United States v. Hanley, et al. and amendments to that Consent Decree.

AUTHORITY TO ACT

39. The signatories of this Consent Decree hereby expressly acknowledge and represent that they possess authority to execute this Consent Decree on behalf of the parties to this Consent Decree.

IT IS SO ORDERED on this ____ day of August, 1995.

EXHIBIT A

PUBLIC REVIEW BOARD

I. Purpose Clause: To review complaints and conduct hearings whenever necessary to insure the high moral and ethical standards in the administrative and operational practices of the HEREIU, its subordinate bodies and locals. To review all matters arising under the HEREIU Ethical Practices Code.

II. Composition: The Public Review Board ("PRB") shall be composed of three individuals of national prominence. The chairman shall be a person with extensive federal prosecutorial experience; the second Board member shall be an individual of national religious affiliation and/or national business prominence; the third Board member shall be the court-appointed monitor, former monitor or his successor of the HEREIU as ordered in United States v. HEREIU, et al., U.S.D.C., D.N.J., Case No. 95-4596 (GEB). Vacancies on the PRB shall be filled by the remaining board members who will consider recommendations from the International President of the HEREIU and its Executive Board, except that, during the pendency of the U.S. v. HEREIU, et al. action, a vacancy in the third board member seat shall be filled by the District Court upon the recommendation of the HEREIU and the United States.

III. Jurisdiction: To make final and binding decisions with regard to all matters presented relating to any possible violations of the HEREIU Ethical Practices Code and all matters referred to the Board by the court-appointed monitor pursuant to the above-mentioned Consent Decree.

The PRB shall have the right and power to remove, suspend, expel, fine or forfeit the benefits (with the exception of vested employee retirement benefits subject to Title I of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act—29 U.S.C. § 1001, et seq.) of any officer, representative, agent, employee or person holding a position of trust in the HEREIU and its constituent entities.

The PRB shall have the right and power to impose its discipline up to and including expulsion from union membership when a member of the HEREIU or its constituent entities is found to have violated the Ethical Practices Code of the HEREIU.

IV. Initiation of matters by the Public Review Board: the PRB may act on any matter it concludes that it is necessary to act upon in order to fulfill the objectives of the HEREIU Ethical Practices Code and the objectives of the PRB.

V. The PRB shall have the power to promulgate its own rules of practice and procedure and amend them from time to time as it deems necessary. (Attached is a draft Rules of Practice and Procedure that the Board may adopt, amend or modify at its initial meeting).

VI. The PRB shall submit annual reports to the membership of the HEREIU which will be presented annually in the HEREIU magazine distributed to all members.

VII. The HEREIU Executive Board is required to fund a budget to cover necessary expenses, including office; staff, travel and operating expenses. The budget shall include reasonable compensation to members of the PRB.

EXHIBIT B

HEREIU ETHICAL PRACTICES CODE

I. Preamble: The purpose of this Code is to insure high standards of executive and administrative practices in the HEREIU, its subordinate bodies and local union officials.

A: HEREIU and subordinate bodies shall maintain adequate safeguards for the prevention of corruption, discrimination, anti-democratic procedures, and the association of any official of the HEREIU or its subordinate bodies with organized crime figures or anyone that would bring disrepute to the union.

B. Union funds are to be held in sacred trust for the benefit of the membership.

II. Financial Practices: Union funds are held in sacred trust for the benefit of the membership. The membership is entitled to assurance that Union funds are not dissipated and are spent for proper purposes. The membership is also entitled to be reasonably informed as to how Union funds are invested or used.

A. The International Union and its Local Unions shall conduct their proprietary functions, including all contracts for purchase or sale or for rendering housekeeping services in accordance with the practice of well-run institutions, including the securing of competitive bids for major contracts.

B. The International Union and its Local Unions shall not permit any of their funds to be invested in a manner which results in the personal profit or advantage of any officer or representative of the Union.

C. There shall be no contracts of purchase or sale or for rendering services which will result in the personal profit or advantage of any officer or representative of the Union. Nor shall any officer, representative or employee of the International Union or any Local Union accept personal profit or special advantage from a business with which the Union bargains collectively.

D. Neither the International Union nor any of its Local Unions shall make loans to its officers, representatives, employees or members, or members of their families, for the purpose of financing the private business of such persons.

III. Health, Welfare, and Retirement Funds:

A. No official, representative or employee of the International Union or a Local Union shall receive fees or salaries of any kind from a fund established for the provision of health, welfare or retirement benefits, except for reasonable reimbursement provided for in a collective bargaining agreement and expressly approved by the International Executive Board.

B. No official, employee or other person acting as agent or representative of the International Union or a Local Union, who exercises responsibilities or influence in the administration of health, welfare and retirement programs or the placement of insurance contracts, shall have any compromising personal ties, direct or indirect, with outside agencies such as insurance carriers, brokers, or consultants doing business with the health, welfare and retirement plans.

C. Complete records of the financial operations of all HEREIU health, welfare and retirement funds and programs shall be maintained in accordance with the best accounting practice. Each such fund shall be audited regularly.

D. All such audit reports shall be available to the members of the Union covered by the fund.

E. The trustees or administrators of such funds shall make a full disclosure and report to the members covered by the fund at least once each year.

IV. Business and Financial Activities of Union Officials: Any person who represents the HEREIU and its members, whether elected or appointed, has a sacred trust to serve the best interests of the members and their families. Therefore, every officer and representative must avoid any outside transaction which even gives the appearance of a conflict of interest. The special fiduciary nature of Union office requires the highest loyalty to the duties of the office.

A. No officer or representative shall have a personal financial interest which conflicts with her/his Union duties.

B. No officer or representative shall have any substantial financial interest (even in the publicly-traded, widely-held stock of a corporation except for stock purchase plans, profit sharing nominal amounts of such stock), in any business with which the HEREIU bargains. An officer or representative shall not have any substantial interest in a business with which the HEREIU bargains collectively.

C. No officer or representative shall accept "kickbacks," under-the-table payments, valuable gifts, lavish entertainment or any personal payment of any kind, other than regular pay and benefits for work performed as an employee from an employer with which the Union bargains or from a business or professional enterprise with which the Union does business.

D. The principles of this Code, of course, apply to investments and activities of third parties, where they amount to a subterfuge to conceal the financial interests of such officials or representatives.

V. Prohibited Conduct:

A. No current and future officers, agents, employees, representatives, and persons holding positions of trust in the HEREIU and its constituent entities as well as all current and future members of the HEREIU and its constituent entities shall:

1. commit any crime listed in 18 U.S.C. § 1961(1);

2. knowingly associate with any member or associate of any criminal group or with any barred person;

3. knowingly permit any member or associate of any criminal group or any barred person to exercise any control or influence, directly or indirectly, in any way or degree, in the conduct of the affairs of the HEREIU and its constituent entities; and

4. obstruct or otherwise interfere, directly or indirectly, with the efforts of anyone effectuating or attempting to effectuate the terms of the Consent Decree in United States v. HEREIU, et al., U.S.D.C., D.N.J., Case No. 95-4596 (GEB), or in attempting to prevent any criminal groups or barred person from exercising influence on the conduct of the affairs of the HEREIU and its constituent entities.

B. As used in the Ethical Practices Code, the term "knowingly associate" shall mean that: (a) the party knows or should know that the person with whom he or she is associating is a member or associate of any criminal group or is a barred person; and (b) the association is more than fleeting.

C. As used in the Ethical Practices Code a "barred person" is: (a) any member or associate of any organized crime family or other criminal group, or (b) any person prohibited from participating in union affairs pursuant to or by operation of the Consent Decree in United States v. HEREIU, et al.; U.S.D.C., D.N.J., Case No. 95-4596 (GEB) or other court order or statute.

JAMES R. THOMPSON

Governor of Illinois (1977-1991)

Partner, Chairman and Chairmen of the Executive Committee Winston & Strawn Chicago, Illinois; New York, New York; Washington, D.C.; Geneva, Switzerland, Riyadh, Saudi Arabia and Paris, France.

James R. Thompson (Republican) was first elected Governor in 1976 by a record 1.39 million votes, with 65 percent of the vote. He was re-elected in 1978 by 596,550 votes, a record for an incumbent, and he won unprecedented consecutive third and fourth terms to office in 1982 and 1986 respectively.

Following his first election to office, Governor Thompson presented a balanced State budget each year of the two-year term; cut the size of government; trimmed welfare rolls; maintained and improved human services; won legislative approval of sweeping reforms in the State's criminal sentencing laws; and began a program that provides almost $1 billion in tax relief annually.

In his second term, the Governor's accomplishments included: holding state spending growth to a rate below inflation; keeping the State's high bond rating intact; building more prisons to take violent criminals off the street; settling the Chicago school system financial crisis; making Illinois a leader in securing federal transportation funding; and bringing together business and labor to solve a number of important issues facing the State including the replacement of the corporate personal property tax and reform of the unemployment insurance system.

In his third term, Governor Thompson helped the State address the financial problems of recession while at the same time gaining legislative approval of a plan to provide vital State services; funding for education, the elderly, abused and neglected children and for the disabled and mentally ill. He also proposed the Building Illinois infrastructure improvement program; created the Project Chance welfare-to-work program; and secured a gasoline tax increase to fund needed road and bridge improvements.

In his fourth term, Governor Thompson continued to promote economic development; was responsible for securing National Scenic River status for the Middle Fork of the Vermillion river; expanded wastewater treatment facilities; strengthened child protection laws; signed Chicago school reform legislation; and kept the Chicago White Sox from moving out of Illinois.

Born May 8, 1936, James A. Thompson, Jr., the eldest of four children of Dr. J. Robert and Agnes Thompson, was reared on the West Side of Chicago.

Following undergraduate training at the University of Illinois and Washington University, he entered Northwestern University Law School, where he was awarded his law degree in 1959.

From 1959 to 1964, James Thompson served as a prosecutor in the Cook County State's Attorney's Office. In 1964 he joined the faculty of Northwestern University Law School as an Associate Professor. From 1969 to 1970 he was Chief of the Department of Law Enforcement and Public Protection, Illinois Attorney General's Office. From 1970 to 1971 he served as First Assistant U.S. Attorney and was appointed U.S. Attorney for the Northern District on November 19, 1971, and served until June 30, 1975. James Thompson has co-authored several books on criminal law.

On June 19, 1976, James A. Thompson married Jayne Ann Carr of Oak Park. Mrs. Thompson, an attorney, was formerly Deputy Chief of the Criminal Division, Illinois Attorney General's Office. They have one daughter, Samantha Jayne, born August 3, 1978.

Governor Thompson has been the recipient of 17 honorary degrees and numerous national and local civic awards. He served as Chairman of the Midwestern Governors' Conference in 1981, Chairman of the Republican Governors' Association in 1982, Chairman of the National Governors' Association (NGA) in 1983, and Chairman of the Council of Great Lakes Governors in 1985.

Governor Thompson was Co-Chairman of the Attorney General's Task Force on Violent Crime in 1981; National Co-Chairman of the Campaign to Protect Our Children in 1986; a member of the National Commission to Prevent Infant Mortality in 1986; Chairman of the NGA Task Force on Electric Utility Transmission Policy in 1986; Chairman of the NGA Task Force on Teen Pregnancy in 1987; Chairman of the NGA Task Force on Transportation Infrastructure in 1988, and Chairman of the NGA Task Force on Global Climate Change in 1989.

Governor Thompson was a member of the Working Group on International Economic Changes: Perestroika and East-West Security, Institute for East-West Security Studies. During his tenure as Governor, he established nine additional trade offices for the State of Illinois.

Governor Thompson serves as a member of the Board of Directors of FMC Corporation, the Chicago Board of Trade, the International Advisory Council of the Bank of Montreal, Prime Retail, Inc., Pechiney International, American Publishing Company, Wackenhut Corrections Corporation, Jefferson Smurfit Corporation and Union Pacific Resources Group, Inc. He also serves as the chairman of the Board of Trustees of the Illinois Academy of Fine Arts. He is the Chairman of the Board of Trustees of the Illinois Mathematics and Science Academy Foundation and serves as a member of The National Trust for Historic Preservation, Chicago Historical Society, Lyric Opera of Chicago, Museum of Contemporary Art, Economic Club of Chicago, Chicago Council on Foreign Relations, and Chancellor's Advisory Board of the University of Illinois at Chicago.

ARCHBISHOP JAMES P. KELEHER

Archbishop James Patrick Keleher was ordained and installed as the Third Archbishop of Kansas City in Kansas on September 8, 1993, at Memorial Hall, Kansas City, Kansas.

Prior to being appointed Archbishop of Kansas City in Kansas, the Archbishop served as the Sixth Bishop of Belleville, Illinois, from 1984 till 1993. Prior to coming to Belleville, he served as President/Rector of Saint Mary of the Lake Seminary, Mundelein, Illinois and Associate Professor in the Department of Systematic Theology.

James Patrick Keleher was born on July 21, 1931. His father, James P. Keleher, died in October, 1972. His mother, Mrs. Rita Theresa (Cullinane) Keleher continues to reside in the Chicago area. He has one sister, Mrs. Hugh (Rita) Zick of Wilmette, Illinois. Mr. and Mrs. Zick have three children, Robert, Steven, and Dianne.

Archbishop Keleher attended Quigley and St. Mary of the Lake Seminaries and was ordained to the priesthood by Cardinal Stritch on April 12, 1958.

The Archbishop received his Masters Degree in Education and his Doctorate in Theology from St. Mary of the Lake Seminary, Mundelain.

He served as an Associate Pastor at St. Henry Parish, Rogers Park, after completing doctoral studies at the Seminary. After being appointed to Quigley Seminary North, Chicago, he did graduate work in the fields of sociology and history.

The Archbishop received a degree in Administration from Loyola University of Chicago and worked in academics and formation at Niles College from 1969-1972. From 1972-1975 he was Dean of Formation at the Major Seminary. During this time he also did post doctoral work in spirituality at the Gregorian University in Rome.

Archbishop Keleher was Rector of Quigley Seminary South until his appointment as President/Rector of St. Mary of the Lake Seminary in 1978. He has maintained an active interest in parish ministry since ordination and served every weekend in local parishes. Prior to going to Belleville, he devoted summer months to rural ministry in the Diocese of Great Falls-Billings, Montana.

In addition to his duties as Archbishop of Kansas City, Archbishop Keleher is the chairperson of the Committee of Economic Concerns of the Holy See of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops, chairperson of the NCCB Committee on Shrines, chairperson of the Ad Hoc Committee of the NCCB for National Shrines, a member of the Migration and Refugee Service Committee of the NCCB, a member of the NCCB Ad Hoc Committee on Stewardship, Episcopal Moderator for the National Catholic Stewardship Council, a member of the Committee of Bishops and Scholars, a member of the Subcommittee on Youth of the Secretariat for Laity and Family Life, an advisor to the NCCB Committee on Priestly Formation, a member of the Board of Trustees of the Basilica of the National Shrine of the Immaculate Conception in Washington, D.C., and chairperson of the Pilgrimage Committee of the National Shrine Board.

Archbishop Keleher is a member of the NCCB Committee for the Church in Latin America. He is a member of the Board of Trustees of Catholic Mutual Relief Society and a member of the Board of Regents of Conception Seminary. He is also a member of the Seminary Department of the National Catholic Education Association and the Midwest Association of Theological Schools.

Rostenkowski Starts Prison Term

Associated Press

ROCHESTER, Minn., July 22—Former representative Dan Rostenkowski began a 17-month sentence for mail fraud today at the federal medical prison, where he will stay while completing his recuperation from prostate cancer surgery.

The Chicago Democrat, former chairman of the tax-writing Ways and Means Committee and confidant of presidents, will have a physical examination and receive any needed treatment during his stay at the Federal Medical Center.

Ultimately, the federal Bureau of Prisons will pick a prison, probably a low-security facility, for Rostenkowski to serve the remainder of his sentence. With credit for good behavior, Rostenkowski could serve about 15 months.

Rostenkowski, 68, pleaded guilty in April to converting office funds to his own use for gifts and to hiring people on the congressional payroll who did little or no official work. He also admitted mailing House payroll checks to his district office to pay employees who performed "personal or political service."

Ex-Rep. Kolter Gets 6-Month Term For Theft From House Post Office

By Toni Locy
Washington Post Staff Writer

Former representative Joseph P. Kolter (D-Pa.) was sentenced yesterday to six months in prison for secretly pocketing $9,300 from the House Post Office and lying about it on official vouchers that said he had gotten postage stamps instead.

U.S. District Judge Norma Holloway Johnson shook her head in disgust when she said that Kolter "betrayed the public trust" by abusing his power for such a small amount of money, which she repeatedly called "dirty lucre."

Johnson ordered Kolter, 70, who served in Congress from 1983 to 1993, to repay the money he stole from taxpayers. She also said he must pay the maximum fine of $20,000 and cover his $1,750-a-month incarceration cost.

Kolter, who has an assortment of health problems, tearfully told Johnson that he takes responsibility for what he did. "I regret that my actions have caused pain and embarrassment to my beloved family, my loyal friends, my former colleagues and my constituents," he said. "I trust they will forgive my transgressions with the same grace that the Lord Jesus Christ promises."

The judge said she is concerned about Kolter's health. He has had cancer, cardiac problems and both knees replaced. She said she will ask the Bureau of Prisons to tell her if it cannot meet Kolter's medical needs at its Rochester, Minn., medical center-prison.

Prosecutors Randall Eliason and Wendy L. Wysong argued that Kolter deserved the maximum 12-month sentence despite his health problems because of the "corrosive" effect his crime has had on public confidence in elected officials.

Johnson said Kolter deserved less time because he seemed to be more remorseful than other public officials caught with their hands in the public purse. "You appear to recognize that you have indeed committed a crime, as opposed to just conducting business as usual," she said, in an oblique reference to former representative Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.), who gave a defiant speech on the courthouse steps after Johnson sentenced him to 17 months in prison in April.

Kolter was snagged in an investigation of the House Post Office after the longtime postmaster, Robert V. Rota, cooperated and told authorities that members of Congress exchanged postage stamps for cash for their own use. Rota will be sentenced in October.

Originally, Kolter was charged with embezzling more than $40,000 in taxpayer funds: $11,000 from the post office and more than $33,000 in House Stationery Store merchandise. By pleading guilty in May to one charge covering the theft of $9,300 from the post office, he was the first former congressman to admit such a fraud existed. Rostenkowski vehemently denied it, suggesting it was a figment of prosecutors' imagination.

Former House Postmaster Receives 4-Month Sentence

By Toni Locy
Washington Post Staff Writer

Robert V. Rota, the former postmaster of the House Post Office, was sentenced yesterday to four months in prison for supplying former representatives Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) and Joseph P. Kolter (D-Pa.) with cash in exchange for stamps.

Rota, 61, wept throughout the hearing where U.S. District Judge Norma Holloway Johnson refused to put him on probation. He reached out and held onto a podium as she imposed the prison term, a $2,000 fine and ordered him to pay $5,000 in restitution to Congress.

In deciding to send Rota to prison despite his cooperation with authorities, Johnson accepted prosecutor Thomas J. Motley's view that Rota had to be punished for lying to investigators in 1980 when the allegations about congressmen getting cash for stamps first surfaced, as well as coercing others to lie.

Johnson said she understood that Rota was under pressure not to cooperate with investigators—pressure exerted on him by Rostenkowski, the former chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, and others. "I know that those powerful men perhaps had such an influence on you that it was difficult to overcome, and it took a long time for you to stand up and say what was really happening," the judge said.

But, she said she couldn't give him probation because she was too troubled by his efforts to cover up the scheme, which prosecutors said spanned 15 years. "I do concern myself, Mr. Rota, with the fact that there was a time when you could have come clean," Johnson said.

Motley said Rota's coverup worked. Rota insisted in 1980 that no such scheme existed and he convinced another employee to lie to Justice Department lawyers, who then closed their investigation.

When the same allegations resurfaced in 1991, Rota used the same tactics. He told congressional investigators the allegations were not true. And he tried—this time unsuccessfully—to get another employee to lie.

Investigators got enough help from that employee and others to indict Rota in 1993. Several months later, Rota made a deal with prosecutors. He agreed to tell them about the congressmen involved and pleaded guilty to three misdemeanors involving conspiracy and embezzlement.

. . . supplied cash for stamps

Eventually, Rostenkowski and Kolter were charged with exchanging stamps for cash with Rota's help. Although Rota never got any money for his role, Rostenkowski was charged with getting $20,000 in cash for stamps—a charge he continues to deny. Kolter admitted getting $9,000 in cash for stamps.

There is a chance that Rota could serve his time in a halfway house because Johnson, at the request of Rota's attorney, Charles Leeper, said she would not object if the Bureau of Prisons put him in one. But she refused to make it part of her sentencing order.

Leeper said Motley had a point when he argued that Rota should have cooperated sooner. But he said Motley, seeing it from a "tough trial lawyer's" point of view, could not possibly understand "what it's like to be under the thumb of someone as powerful as Mr. Rostenkowski."

Rostenkowski, a one-time Chicago ward politician, led the Ways and Means Committee for 14 years and was one of the most powerful members of Congress. When Rota bucked Rostenkowski, Leeper said, it was "a true act of courage."

Johnson smiled when Leeper said she would never see Rota standing on the courthouse steps before a cluster of media microphones railing against her or investigators—as Rostenkowski did after he pleaded guilty last April and was sentenced to 17 months in prison.

When it was his turn to speak, Rota was overcome. "I have nothing to say," he said, weeping. "I did wrong, and I'm sorry."

Now 3 other staff [redacted] present salary $55,000 cannot be raised during the four year term

95 would be next election year, 91 was last.

Recruiting Sect 2150

Was elected w/ help of 32nd Ward Organization. They offered space currently 5 viable "organizations" left in city. in 1969 50 organizations People who do not get salaries but volunteer time to get candidates elected. People now don't volunteer to work like Ward same as district. Each now 55,000 people per Ward. 3,000,000 total population in the City of Chicago.

32nd Ward is "1/2 viable" others are 11th Ward, 19th, 14th

Redistricting occurred and that did a lot to hurt the ward system Few people want to switch to new ward. 32nd wards redistricted '81, '83, '86, federal ordered 91 ten year redistricting as result of 10yr census. Had to hold district together with [redacted] b6 b7C b7D Committeeman in 1988) Defeated the Rosty. who had been in that position for 30 years. March Election: Totally a party position elected every 4 years. Duties are to sit in the Council of Committeemen sometimes meet w/ 50 other Cook Co. Districts. Duties:

County run mostly. Elections held mostly. meet Election judges

32nd Ward 66-4P precinct dealership push from city to make restaurants larger to cut costs.

Once per year a fund raiser + used to raise money for Ward Expenses a fund raiser cost $50,000 5-6 years ago about $5,000 loss.

2150 cannot recall who negotiated lease 25 years ago. did not record ownerships certainly, but believes Rosty family owned property at that time.

Assumption (His) of the situation: 1965 got about $8,000 for expenses (rent etc for district office) Walter Wally Nega ran 32nd ward organization at that time. Everything Rosty was actual committee man. Nega ran day to day affairs. Very little daily operations. Most work done at night because of all the paid volunteers. + have day jobs. 2180 any members would spout and ~~vote~~ Kinnon boys, include who on DR and encourage people in ward to vote for DR.

Precinct Captain and volunteers for each precinct, not all precincts now have captain.

Jan 1990 a captain was in place for all precincts.

In 88 there was considerable activity for D.R. . 32nd used any unused short cuts and tricks to get signatures for his reelection 8-9000 sigs to nominate Roety.

Campaign for Roety changed in 1988 when he was no longer committee [redacted] so campaign changed in that regard. Action taken would depend on the strength of the opposition against Roety 1986 - good turnout and in the General Election no work was done to counter that. 88+90 less known persons opposition to D.R.

Also would put up sign. Do campaign mailings, carry door to door.

Mailings

Jan of every year there would be a general election 30 days before Election October there would be registration before November election. Pre-1990 stronger rules on registration.

For each person that registered an envelope with that persons name on it and a letter would be put in the envelope from DR as high as 3800, but usually 2000-3000. They would have to come to a registration poll place.

Not known to get mailings from AEP One of major functions before we did was election coordinator; [redacted] was told that [redacted] called to FBI. Did not talk to D.R. that day. [redacted] called [redacted] and told that agent went to her home. Spoke w/ almost everyone in office about the case & visit. Called close friend [redacted] LNU to reassure her.

Recalls talking to DR the next day. Has had conversations about meetings w/ DR.

Told DR. that it was difficult to get citizens enthused about serving the public over decades, and in one moment it could be gone.

Talked about local newspaper about no company office + generally what was occurring.

DP was married to Louis E. Papp until they were divorced in 1977. DP and LEP lived together until LEP died on 2/21/90 while they were vacationing in Florida. DP & LEP were in Florida for approximately one week before he died.

LEP volunteered his time as a Precinct Capt. under Gabinski to get a job in the Park District. LEP retired from the Park Dist. in 1989.

After retiring LEP spent aprox. 2 days a week, a couple hours per day helping out around Gabrielski's office.

LEP donated his time as a volunteer and DP does not know if LEP got paid for his assistance.

PP stated that LEP did no work for DAN ROSTENKOWSKI.

TERMS AND CONDITIONS

DEFINITIONS

On this Airbill, we, our and us refer to Federal Express Corporation, its employees and agents. You and your refer to the sender, its employees and agents.

AGREEMENT TO TERMS

By giving us your package to deliver, you agree to all the terms on this Airbill and in our current Service Guide, which is available on request. If there is a conflict between the current Service Guide and this Airbill, the Service Guide will control. No one is authorized to alter or modify the terms of our Agreement.

RESPONSIBILITY FOR PACKAGING AND COMPLETING AIRBILL

You are responsible for adequately packaging your goods and for properly filling out this Airbill. Omission of the number of packages and weight per package from this Airbill will result in a billing based on our best estimate of the number of packages received from you and an estimated "default" weight per package, as determined and periodically adjusted by us.

AIR TRANSPORTATION TAX INCLUDED

Our basic rate includes a federal tax required by Internal Revenue Code Section 4271 on the air transportation portion of this service.

LIMITATIONS ON OUR LIABILITY AND LIABILITIES NOT ASSUMED

Our liability for loss or damage to your package is limited to your actual damages or $100, whichever is less, unless you pay for and declare a higher authorized value. We do not provide cargo liability insurance, but you may pay an additional charge for each additional $100 of declared value. If you declare a higher value and pay the additional charge, our liability will be the lesser of your declared value or the actual value of your package.

In any event we will not be liable for any damages, whether direct, incidental, special or consequential in excess of the declared value of a shipment, whether or not Federal Express had knowledge that such damages might be incurred including, but not limited to, loss of income or profits.

We won't be liable for your acts or omissions, including but not limited to improper or insufficient packing, securing, marking or addressing, or for the acts or omissions of the recipient or anyone else with an interest in the package. Also, we won't be liable, if you or the recipient violates any of the terms of our agreement. We won't be liable for loss of or damage to shipments of prohibited items.

We won't be liable for loss, damage or delay caused by events we cannot control, including but not limited to acts of God, perils of the air, weather conditions, acts of public enemies, war, strikes, civil commotions, or acts or omissions of public authorities (including customs and quarantine officials) with actual or apparent authority.

DECLARED VALUE LIMITS

The highest declared value we allow for FedEx Letter and FedEx Pak shipments is $500. For other shipments, the highest declared value we allow is $25,000 unless your package contains items of "extraordinary value," in which case the highest declared value we allow is $500. Items of "extraordinary value," include artwork, jewelry, furs, precious metals, negotiable instruments, and other items listed in our current Service Guide.

If you send more than one package on this Airbill, you may fill in the total declared value for all packages, not to exceed the $100, $500 or $25,000 per package limit described above. (Example: 5 packages can have a total declared value of up to $125,000.)

If more than one package is shipped on this airbill, our liability for loss or damage will be limited to the actual value of the package(s) lost or damaged (not to exceed the lesser of the total declared value or the per package limits described above). You have the responsibility of proving the actual loss or damage.

FILING A CLAIM

ALL CLAIMS MUST BE MADE BY YOU IN WRITING. You must notify us of your claim within strict time limits. See current Service Guide.

We'll consider your claim filed if you call and notify our Customer Service Department at 800-238-5355 and notify us in writing as soon as possible.

Within 90 days after you notify us of your claim, you must send us all relevant information about it. We are not obligated to act on any claim until you have paid all transportation charges, and you may not deduct the amount of your claim from those charges.

If the recipient accepts your package without noting any damage on the delivery record, we will assume that the package was delivered in good condition. In order for us to process your claim, you must, to the extent possible, make the original shipping cartons and packing available for inspection.

RIGHT TO INSPECT

We may, at our option, open and inspect your packages prior to or after you give them to us to deliver.

NO C.O.D. SERVICES

NO C.O.D. SERVICES ON THIS AIRBILL. If C.O.D Service is required, please use a Federal Express C.O.D. airbill for this purpose.

RESPONSIBILITY FOR PAYMENT

Even if you give us different payment instructions, you will always be primarily responsible for all delivery costs, as well as any cost we may incur in either returning your package to you or warehousing it pending disposition.

RIGHT OF REJECTION

We reserve the right to reject a shipment at any time, when such shipment would be likely to cause damage or delay to other shipments, equipment or personnel, or if the transportation of which is prohibited by law or is in violation of any rules contained in this Airbill or our current Service Guide.

MONEY-BACK GUARANTEE

In the event of untimely delivery, Federal Express will at your request and with some limitations, refund or credit all transportation charges. See current Service Guide for further information.

Car, Van Titles Tied to Rosty

Grand Jury Told Vehicles Owned and Not Leased

By Chuck Neubauer
Staff Writer

A grand jury witness in the investigation of U.S. Rep. Dan Rostenkowski says subpoenaed documents show a Wilmette auto dealer handled the lawmaker's acquisition of three vehicles as purchases and not as government leases, as Rostenkowski maintains.

The federal government is trying to determine if Rostenkowski illegally used $73,000 in taxpayer funds to buy the vehicles and then disguised the payments as government leases for mobile offices.

The witness was Kevin Stiritz, a former employee of Wil-Shore Motor Sales Inc., who said the company's subpoenaed files, which he examined for prosecutors, contained purchase documents and not lease contracts and worksheets.

He said the dealership's files looked to him like the transactions were "100 percent retail purchases." Stiritz was the finance manager for the dealership from October, 1992, until February, 1993.

Stiritz had no direct involvement or knowledge of the Rostenkowski transactions. Prosecutors asked him to examine the documents and explain the normal way business was done at the dealership. He is one of several former and current Wil-Shore employees to be subpoenaed.

The files did not contain such basic lease information as instructions for returning the car or purchasing it when the lease expired, he said. The only lease document he was shown was the one Rostenkowski filed with the House so that Wil-Shore would get paid.

Stiritz said he spent Monday and Tuesday in Washington, D.C., with prosecutors and grand jurors investigating how the vehicles became Rostenkowski's personal property.

The federal investigation of the vehicles began after a Jan. 24 report in the Chicago Sun-Times questioned whether Rostenkowski had improperly used his congressional expense allowance to acquire the two vans and a station wagon.

Rostenkowski has denied any wrongdoing involving the vehicles and his aides insist the vehicles were leased. He's also denied allegations in the House post office scandal that he embezzled cash through transactions disguised as stamp purchases.

Robert S. Bennett, his Washington attorney, warned Friday night that "people should withhold judgment, until all the evidence is in. ... The congressman is entitled to due process, and trial in the press and by the press violates that.

"You should question the motives of someone who goes into the grand jury and testifies in what is essentially a secret proceeding and then calls the newspapers to report on his testimony."

Witnesses before a federal grand jury are free to discuss their testimony, according to federal rules.

Beginning in February, 1987, records show Rostenkowski billed taxpayers $1,050 a month for "mobile offices" he told Congress he was leasing for two years each. They were a customized 1987 Ford Econoline van, a 1989 Ford Aerostar minivan and a 1991 Ford Taurus wagon.

The Sun-Times revealed that the $1,050 monthly payments made directly to the dealership exceeded the customary leasing cost for such vehicles. And unlike a standard lease, the cars were titled in Rostenkowski's name as soon as the payments started.

Stiritz was asked by prosecutors whether lease cars ever were put in the name of the person leasing the vehicle and he said he responded: "It is never done." He said the title is always kept in the name of the owner; in a standard lease, that would be the leasing company.

He said putting the car titles immediately in Rostenkowski's name was one of the signs the congressman was being treated as the owner and not the lessor. Rostenkowski also did not list the vehicles as leased on the title applications.

He said he was asked about one document that could indicate a lease: an insurance policy on one of the vehicles which listed Wil-Shore as a "lessee payee." Stiritz said this meant Wil-Shore would get the insurance proceeds if anything happened to the car.

Stiritz said the files showed the purchase prices of three vehicles were $25,000 for the Econoline, $21,000 for the Aerostar and $25,000 for the Taurus—close to the $25,000 taxpayers paid during each two-year lease periods.

After the lease periods ended, Rostenkowski retained ownership of the Econoline van and the Aerostar minivan. He has maintained he purchased the vehicles at the end of the leases, using $9,715 in campaign funds for the van and an undisclosed amount of personal funds to purchase the minivan.

Stiritz said he did not see any record of such payments in the files he examined.

Donald Roberts, the owner of Wil-Shore, could not be reached for comment Friday. He told the Sun-Times in the past that Rostenkowski "bought his cars from me in a normal fashion. I don't know what arrangement he has made with the government to pay for the cars."

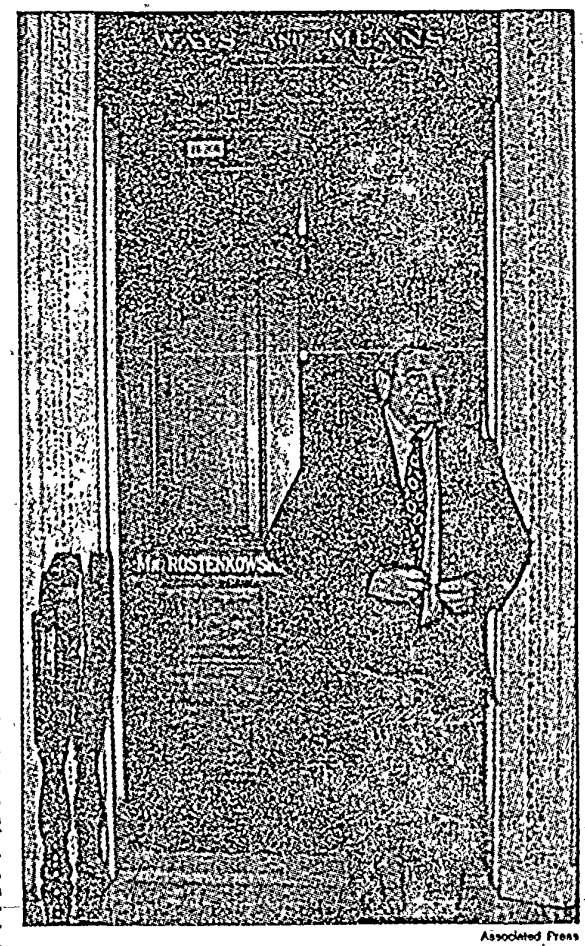
Federal prosecutors also questioned Stiritz about when the Taurus wagon was returned to Wil-Shore.

Rostenkowski has said he returned the wagon in November, 1992, before the lease was up and before the Sun-Times began asking questions about the vehicles in December.

Prosecutors showed Stiritz a copy of the Taurus' title that Rostenkowski had signed and given to Wil-Shore. His signature was dated Nov. 13 or 16, 1992, Stiritz said.

He told prosecutors the car was returned in late December or early January after Sun-Times inquiries.

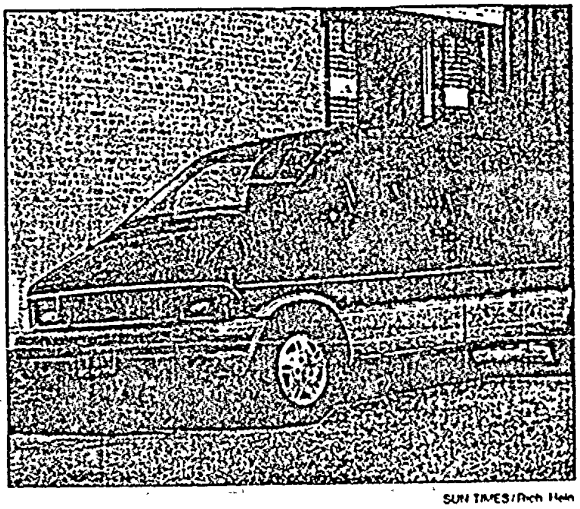
He said the day the car was returned, he saw a man who could have been Rostenkowski leaving the dealership. He said he was told later by other employees that Rostenkowski had returned the car himself that day.



All three vehicles still are in Rostenkowski's name, according to the Illinois secretary of state's office.

All three vehicles were ordered with trailer hitches and heavy-duty suspensions, Stiritz said. The Taurus had a radio installed, a remote starter and an $800 alarm system, he said.

Stiritz said he also was asked what he knew about Rostenkowski's use of campaign funds at Wil-Shore. He said he had no knowledge of those transactions.



The grand jury also appears to be trying to determine if Rostenkowski used campaign funds to acquire personal vehicles at Wil-Shore, other sources have said.

The Rostenkowski for Congress Committee paid $68,110 to Wil-Shore between 1975 and 1988. He and his family took title to many automobiles from Wil-Shore during that period.

U.S. Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) leaves his office on Capitol Hill Thursday. A grand jury is trying to determine if Rostenkowski illegally used $73,000 in taxpayer funds to buy three vehicles.

WHO USES MOBILE OFFICES

Dan Rostenkowski had one of the smallest districts in Congress in the last session: some 33 square miles. Yet for six years he charged taxpayers a hefty $1,050 a month to lease a mobile office.

Of the 23 representatives who leased a mobile office in 1991, Rostenkowski's district was the smallest, according to a USA Today and Gannett News Service study.

Other representatives lease mobile offices, like converted Winnebago mobile homes, to service constituents who live hundreds of miles from their official district offices. Rostenkowski's congressional office at the time, at 2148 N. Damen, was within 10 miles of any point in his district.

Rostenkowski has declined to discuss how he used his mobile offices—two vans and a station wagon.

In addition to his mobile offices, Rostenkowski also charges taxpayers to lease a 1988 Lincoln Continental for driving around the district.

Not sure [redacted] may have worked in as Assistant at FULLERTON COURT

[redacted] was the first person to do transport.

When the program started remember the Alderman not sure that the Alderman paid her, but believed Alderman Gabinski paid her. Gabinski started the program for senior citizens in his ward.

1985 Managing WALSH PARK - 1734 N. Paulina
2/89 subsidized later: FULLERTON COURT - 2303 N. Clybourne

Maybe Jewel on Ashland N. of Fullerton

Arrangements for VAN - think that CAMCO leased it.

Don't recall how [redacted] got her job, possibly thru re/not sure.

Don't remember how the program got started

TG was always very concerned for the Sewers

DR - as far as SS is concerned never knew that DR was involved.
SS has never met DR

SS does not know [redacted]

SS is not involved in politics and has never contributed to RCC / ALF / 32nd Ward.

[redacted] AOR [redacted] SSAN [redacted] was contacted at his place of employment. [redacted] b6 b7C [redacted] was advised of the identity of the interviewing agents and the nature of the interview. [redacted] provided the following information:

[redacted] has known Congressman Daniel Rostenkowski for approximately 35 years. The two met socially and have continued to be friends. [redacted] has made financial contributions to a campaign fund of Rostenkowski's as well as volunteering. He has also done volunteer work for Rostenkowski's campaign. "From time to time over the years," [redacted] plays golf with Rostenkowski.

Approximately two and ½ years ago (1991) a chick bearing Rostenkowski's name on the back and a painting of the US Capitol on the front, was "dropped off at [redacted] place of employment. [redacted] believes it was just before "Christmas." He does not know who dropped it off, or if a card or note accompanied the gift. [redacted] does not remember if he sent a thank you note but stated he probably did. [redacted] was not asked to reimburse anyone for the gift, nor did he.

Approximately one year and 1/2 ago (1992), [redacted] received a crystal caption "paper weight" as a gift from [redacted] Rostenkowski. The gift was dropped off and [redacted] does not recall who dropped it off or if it was accompanied by a card or a note, [redacted] was not asked to reimburse anyone for the gift, nor did he. [redacted] believes he may have sent a thank you note. Over a period of years, [redacted] has received approximately 6 golf shirts, 2 sweaters and 2 gloves, each with either an official seal or notation indicating it was from [redacted] Rostenkowski. [redacted] does not recall how he received these gifts, nor when he received them. [redacted] does not remember if a card or note was attached with them or if he sent a thank you note. [redacted] was not asked to reimburse anyone for the gift and did he believe that any of the [redacted] had put [redacted] in touch with [redacted]. [redacted] would be found at his ex-wife's residence.

(5)

The [redacted] b3
is currently at [redacted] residence in Aspen Colorado [redacted] noted that he would have his [redacted] who is there now, b6 b7C mail it to him. [redacted] then stated that he would contact [redacted] when he had received the objects. [redacted] believes that all of the aforementioned gifts were sent to him because of the friendship and support of

year or two ago. couple years received the chair.
best of knowledge it was delivered to the mail room 19th Floor at [redacted] don't know if it was mailed or dropped off.
Didn't expect the chair, conversation: might have thanked him for the chair.
Assumed, it was a gift from a friend, has known DR for close to 20 yrs.
long time friend and supporter.
Never was asked for and never reimbursed DR for the chair.
Golf sweaters / souvineers of golf tournaments.
Don't recall ever receiving a crystal paperweight.
Received a plate at ~~the~~ house ways & means committee.
Don't recall ever receiving any glass mugs or crystal

Capitol Chair received in in the last 3 yrs. not recall what time of the year it was given. The Capitol Chair was not sent/delivered to L; [redacted] recalls OR telling her here is a chair table it. [redacted] doesn't recall seeing any other chairs. Could have picked it up at Dave Office or Noble Office but believe it would probably have been at the Noble Office. Here I got something for you. Said thanks and I appreciate it.

Never asked to donate $ to PAC or Campaign or Memorial.

Knew OR for approx 35-40 yrs, got to know OR when his wife who's father was a State Senator and knew OR.

10-20 or even older - received ash tray - Probably received it the same way as the chair - he regifted it to me. but cant recall.

WMC Bic. Plate - received seating after bic. celebration could have been in 1987 or 1988. - really don't remember who he gave it to this was handed to [redacted] or his wife, think it was DAN. b6 b7C Can't recall receiving any of the gifts from agent Lust OR.

One golf shirt ed or golf sweater received at golf tourney from OR. can't recall year or golf course.

One Mug - can't remember anything about it, it was the kind of thing I would have been given directly by OR.

Received crystal capitol aprox same period of time as the Chair for 3 yrs. sure that OR handed to him or his wife.

- Crystal received & receipt given.

Re: [redacted]

Dear [redacted]:

As you know, I represent [redacted] You have asked me whether or not my client has received any gifts or other monetary benefits from Representative Dan Rostenkowski. In response to your inquiry, please be advised that [redacted] advises me that he has received no gifts or monetary benefits from Representative Rostenkowski. However, [redacted] advises that the Copernicus Foundation has received gifts from Representative Rostenkowski over the last twenty years. These gifts have been made by check, and [redacted] believes that they were honoraria received by Representative Rostenkowski and directed to the Copernicus Foundation in his name. I have attached to this letter a ledger made and kept by the Copernicus Foundation listing the gifts received on behalf Representative Rostenkowski since 1973.

If you need any additional information or clarification, please let me know and we can set up an interview with my client.

Very truly yours,

Dear [redacted]:

As of March 31, 1983 I will no longer require the space that I have been leasing in the Kluczynski Building.

I would like to have the furnishings and the Karastan carpeting in that office moved to (and in the case of the carpeting, installed in) my district office. The address of my district office is 2148 North Damen Avenue; Chicago, Illinois 60647.

Please have a member of your staff contact my secretary, Nancy Panzke, at 312-276-6000 to make arrangements for this move.

Thanking you for your past and future cooperation, I remain

Sincerely yours,

Dan Rostenkowski
Member of Congress

worked for Kluzinski ~ 4 yrs 67-69 or 70-70 - left aprox 6 mths before Klu died

DAN's and Kluzinski had office space together on 26th Floor of the Dirksen Bldg.
DR had a reception office but not manned. ~~Front Desk~~

DAN did not have personal at the office. Occasionally people would come to the office & be referred to DR's District office

Eleonor Georgalus worked for Klu. and later worked for John Fay then DR.

75-82 worked for Cong. John Fary started out as sect. then worked up to Manager of a District office.

78-80 at 230 S. Dearborn b6 b7C

DR. had a corner office and Morgan Murphy was between them.

Eleanor Georgadas was at DR's office all the time on a daily basis - did Immigration basically

~~His AA: Ed Pienczak~~ I think. [redacted] stated that EG use to help [redacted] w Immigration questions had.

(not sure how)

[redacted] - lives in Chicago around marquette park.

Fary AA. - would know who's D.R.'s AA was [redacted]

[redacted] stated that DR had a few employees at 230 S. Dearborn but could not remember who they were Never heard of [redacted] then realized that she was if not sure EP ever worked for DR.

[redacted] knows EP. but [redacted] doesn't know if E.P. worked for DR. b6 b7C originally said that EP was DR's AA ~~but~~ and that he (EP) went from DR's office to FARY's office. [redacted] was asked if she was certain of that fact or if EP could have come from HWE's office.

ACTORS ACADEMY OF CHICAGO is the Midwest's only non-affiliated conservatory for actor training. Its program of classes are taught by specialists in acting, voice and movement within a team-teaching format. On-stage work for the student, as is this evening's production, is an integral part of the Academy's curriculum.

PICK is the culmination of ten weeks' study and rehearsal by its creators and performers.

AUTHOR'S NOTE

Having been born and raised, and having spent a portion of my adult life in central Illinois, I have grown to wonder at the almost-stoic fear of the new, the different and the individual that is perpetuated throughout the region. Knowing it was not unique to Illinois, yet aware of my own roots, I began to investigate both its history and my own imagination. PICK is an attempt to explore that first period of growth when the first towns were built and the fear was first implanted.

DIRECTOR'S NOTE

I believe PICK represents a part in all of us that we wish to ignore, the core of what we have not truly come to understand: that we will continue repeating the tragic and senseless in life because we refuse to take responsibility for one another. We refuse to learn. We prefer our fear and our prejudice and our ignorance, growing only more numb as they continue rather than more aware. Also, I wish to express my heartfelt thanks to everyone who has worked so hard and learned so much [illegible] will be able to take it with you as you go.
