Mr. Paul Chretien called me at 12:20 hours on 17 December, presumably on the basis of some press query, asking "whether there is still an Soviet intelligence school in Minsk." I told him I'd never heard of one in the first place; had he? No, he hadn't. I then checked through Mary Kay Viering and got the following sole trace, which I passed to Chretien by phone, simply saying that there had been a report of one back in 1947, source reliability unknown, but that if --- as I suspected --- his query concerned "spy schools", then there are none anywhere Spies are trained individually; schools are for staff personnel here and in the USSR. I discussed fabrications of this sort, and from: he seemed to understand fully.
