Subject: Dimensions

Nine to thirteen feet is about average for your adult Nile crocodile, although accurate measurements are complicated by wiggling. The American crocodile grows somewhat larger, while the saltwater crocodile of Asia sometimes reaches a length of twenty feet or more--or did before Communism. Some people argue that this is really BIG, but you'll notice that they are usually quite short themselves. The Florida alligator, a member in good standing of the crocodile family, can also measure up to twenty feet if pressed. Chinese alligators (now rare) are more delicate, as a result of centuries of bound feet.
