Subject: "Go West, young man!"

While no longer young enough, I guess, to be regarded as following Horace Greeley's famous imperative, I will be moving to Phoenix, AZ, in October. My wife and I have decided to make the move back to her hometown before the advent of another east coast winter. I had thought and hoped that our move west would take place after the Review Board had finished its work, but various events have conspired to move up our timetable. Though excited about our new western adventure, I will not be leaving without much regret. But, as I have at least two months (and hopefully as many AOH meetings) to get all maudlin, I shall be reporting to work on the morrow per usual, and look forward to helping those who remain get as much of our important work done as possible in the too little time that remains to me here. I hate to use this one up now, as it could have been put to even better use come October, but I am nonetheless reminded of two lines from Yeats (which George McGovern used in his 1972 election night concession speech): Count where a man's glory most begins and ends, And say my glory was I had such friends.... or words to that effect. From "The Municipal Gallery Revisited", if I'm not mistaken. See you tomorrow, gang.
