Subject: CIA-1
I spent a full day last Thursday going over the two boxes of materials that CIA has collected in response to CIA Request #1, in conjunction with a copy of the list that Michelle put together of things missing from the response. (By the way, shouldn't there be a copy of this list in our files somewhere? I used HRG's copy.) I checked Michelle's list against the collection and, with a few minor exceptions noted below, agreed with her findings. I also tried to make some sense of the material that CIA did supply. Overall, I found that CIA responded to this request by drawing largely upon three sources of information: routing and reference lists for DDP, Agency-wide notices, and Headquarters Regulations. The latter two sources included materials through the 1970s, while the DDP lists covered the years 1958-67. I found little in the collection that I would consider an assassination record. Those few items (marked with post-its) that potentially fall into this category include a list of CIA personnel who served as liaison with the Warren Commission, HSCA, and other investigative bodies; an organization chart for JMWAVE, and DDP's routing and reference list for October 1963 (February 1964 might also be of interest). I also marked mission statements and organization charts of certain offices and directorates in which you, in CIA-1, had expressed an interest (IG, OGC, OLC, NPIC, OO, DI, DDR, DDP and Domestic Contact Service). Some of these are for scattered years, and there was only one organizational chart (1979) for the OGC. Much of the material collected in response to CIA-1 is outdated and potentially releasable, whether or not it is assassination-related, but Barry cautions that even though the DA has indicated willingness to release its records here, it would probably be a difficult and lengthy process to coordinate the remaining materials for release. You might wish to sound him out further on this subject. Please note that DDP's routing and reference listings are not organizational charts per se. They give office names/symbols and office breakdowns, along with phone and room numbers (long outdated, but possibly useful for tracking routing sheets in CIA's JFK papers and Oswald file). The only organizational charts for DDP that I could find in this collection are for the years 1957 and 1958. In addition to requesting further organizational charts for DDP, especially for the early 1960s, I would suggest asking whether the DCD was ever known as the Domestic Contact Service or the Domestic Operations Division. There are references to both in these materials-- Domestic Operations Division for 1962-68 and Domestic Contact Service for 1966-67. My guess is that DCD was once the Domestic Contact Service and that the Domestic Operations Division was something else, but it might be worth checking. Also, although CIA supplied no charts for entities responsible for liaison with the FBI, I would assume that the references to "liaison" under "CI" in the DDP routing and reference lists would include this activity. It might be worth while requesting something more specific.
