SendTo: INTERNET-BOARD;ALL CopyTo: DisplayBindCopyTo: BlindCopyTo: CN=R cord/O=ARRB From: CN=Elleen Sullivan/O=ARRB DisplayFormDomain: DisplayFormDomain: DisplayFormDomain: 01/29/1998 ComposedDate_Time: 12/08:23 PM ComposedDate_Time: 11:40:22 AM Subject: Arroy about today's release of documents ComposedDate_Time: 11:40:22 AM Subject: Arroy about today's release of documents ComposedDate_Time: 11:40:22 AM Subject: Arroy about today's release of documents Control Control Not a scheme to provoke Cuban dictator Fidel Castro into attacking the United States so that retailating U.S. forces could "destroy Castrow dits pseed, force and determination," newly declassified records show. One plan, for example, called for concurrent air and sea assault exercises in the Caribbean, loading and deployment exercises on the East and Guif coasts of the United States, and air defense exercises in the Southeast United States to lure Castro into a sostifie reaction. Ayea riskes. But the planners got coll feet, the documents shoud be maintained, after the faet, with wey great difficulty," a nemo said. "If the decision should be math inghtshed light on President Kennedy's assaination on Nov. 22, 1063. At the time, Cuba was consider	NR_key_name:	D84940BDBB3F2C408525659B005B9614
DisplayBlindCopyTo:UBlindCopyTo:CN-Elicen Sullivan/O=ARRBDisplayDate:01/29/1998DisplayDate:01/29/1998ComposedDate:01/29/1998Subject:12/08:23 PMSubject:12/08:23 PMComposedDate:01/29/1998ComposedDate:01/29/1998Subject:15/09/2016Subject:01/29/1998Subject:01/29/1998ComposedDate:01/29/1998ComposedDate:01/29/1998Subject:01/29/1998Subject:01/29/1998Subject:01/29/1998Subject:01/29/1998ComposedDate:01/29/1998Subject:01/29/1998 </th <th></th> <th></th>
DisplayBlindCopyTo:UBlindCopyTo:CN-Elicen Sullivan/O=ARRBDisplayDate:01/29/1998DisplayDate:01/29/1998ComposedDate:01/29/1998Subject:12/08:23 PMSubject:12/08:23 PMComposedDate:01/29/1998ComposedDate:01/29/1998Subject:15/09/2016Subject:01/29/1998Subject:01/29/1998ComposedDate:01/29/1998ComposedDate:01/29/1998Subject:01/29/1998Subject:01/29/1998Subject:01/29/1998Subject:01/29/1998ComposedDate:01/29/1998Subject:01/29/1998 </th <th>СоруТо:</th> <th></th>	СоруТо:
From:CN=Elleen Sullivan/O=ARRBDisplayfromDomain:01/23/1998ObjaplayDate_Time:12:08:23 PMComposedDate:01/23/1998ComposedDate:01/23/1998Subject:A story about today's release of documents.Subject:A story about today's release of documents.Subject:A story about today's release of documents.From:NIKE FEINSILBER Associated Press Writer WASHINGTON (AP) = In 1962 Pentagon planners came up with a scheme to provoke Cuban dictator rifeld Castro into attacking the United States on that retailating U.S. torces could "destroy Castro with speed, force and determination," newly declassified records show. One plan, for example, called for concurrent air and sea assault exercises in the Southeast United States to lure Castro into a hostile reaction. A year later, with that plan shelved, planners had a new idea: Provoke a war between Cuba and another Latin American state so the United States, could come to the aid of the threatened nation through an invasion of Cubao aria strikes. But the planners got cold feet, the documents show. "Any of the contrived situations described above are inherently, extremely risky in our democratic system in which security can be maintained, after the fact, with very great difficulty." a memo said. "If the descion should be made to set up a contrived situation it should be one in which harticipation by the Assassination Rocords Review Doard, a government was in the early 1960s," said John his association with the Fair Play for Cuba Committee. "These military records further demostrate how high on the U.S. government's caribeasen Survey Group and dated Feb. 19, 1962, called for making Castro so fearful of a miniment U.S. attack that he would call up the Cuban militic, cassing "a complet distrobin of the available<	= =
DisplayFromDomain:1/29/1998DisplayDate:01/29/1998DisplayDate_Time:01/29/1998ComposedDate:01/29/1998ComposedDate:11/40/22 AMSubject:04 Story about today's release of documents ComposedDate:Subject:05 story castro with speed, force and determination, "newly declassified records show. One plan forces could "destroy Castro with speed, force and determination," newly declassified records show. One plan forces could "destroy Castro with speed, force and determination," newly declassified records show. One plan forces could "destroy Castro with speed, force and adtermination," newly declassified records show. One plan forces could "destroy Castro with speed, force and adtermination," newly declassified records show. One plan forces could "destroy Castro with speed, force and adtermination," newly declassified records show. One plan forces could "destroy Castro with speed, force and adtermination," newly declassified records show. One plan forces could "destroy Castro with speed, force and adtermination," newly declassified records show. One plan forces could "destroy Castro with speed, force and adtermination," newly declassified records show. One plan forces could "destroy Castro with speed, force and adtermination," newly declas	BlindCopyTo:	CN=R ecord/O=ARRB
DisplayDate:01/29/1998DisplayDate_Time:02:08:23 PMComposeDbate:11:40:22 AMSubject:A story about today's release of documents on the published, broadcast or otherwise distributed without the prior written authority of the Associated Press. By MIKE FEINSILBER Associated Press. Anneus reserved. Internotination contained in trading the published, broadcast or otherwise distributed without the prior written authority of the Associated Press. By MIKE FEINSILBER Associated Press. Vitter WASHINGTON (AP) – In 1962 Pentagon planners came up in the ascheme to provoke Cuban dictator Fidel Castro into attacking the United States so that retailating US for example, called for concurrent air and sea assault exercises in the Caribbean, loading and deployment exercises on the East and Gulf coasts of the United States, and air defense exercises in the Southeast United States to lure Castro into a hostile reaction. A year later, with that plan shelved, planners had a new idea: Provoke a war between Cuba and another Latin American state so the United States could come to the aid of the threatend nation through an invasion of Cuba or air strikes. But the planners got cold feet, the documents show. "Any of the contrived situations described above are inherently, extremely risky in our basid. "If the decision should be made to set up a contrived situation is should be one in which participation by U.S. personnel is limited only to the most high trusted covert personnel." The records were made public tota to public inspection any records that mightshed light on President Kennedy's assassination Now. 22, 1963. A the time, Cuba was considered a possible sponsor of assassination suspect Le Harvey Oswald because of his stosociation with the Fair Play for Cuba Committee. "These military records further demonstrate how high to public inspection any records that mightshed li	From:	CN=Eileen Sullivan/O=ARRB
DisplayDate_Time:12:08:23 PMComposedDate:01/29/1998ComposedDate_Time:11:40:22 AMSubject:AP story about today's release of documents ComposedDate_Time:AP story about today's release of documents ComposedDate Time: a store or therwise distributed without the prior written authority of the Associated Press. By MIKE FEINSILBER Associated Press Writer WASHINGTON (AP) In 1962 Pentagon planners came up with a scheme to provoke Cuban dictator Fidel Castro into attacking the United States so that retailating U.S. for example, called for concurrent air and sea assault exercises in the Caribbean, loading and deployment exercises on the East and Gulf coasts of the United States, and air defense exercises in the Southeast United States to lure Castro into a hostile reaction. A year later, with that plan sheved, planners had a new idea: Provoke a war between Cuba and another Latin American state so the United States could come to the aid of the threatened nation through an invasion of Cuba or air strikes. But the planners got cold feet, the documents show. "Any of the contrived situations described above are inherently, extremely risky in our democratic system in which security can be maintained, after the fact, with very great difficulty." a meno said. "If the decision should be made to set up a contrived situation suspect Lee Harvey Oswald because of his association with the Fair Play for Cuba Committee. "These military records further domostrate how high on the U.S. government's caribabean Survey Group and dated Feb. 19, 1962, called for animinent U.S. attack that he would call up the Cuban militar, acusing "a complete disruption of the available labor force" for the 1962 sugar cane harvest. The same paper spelled out plans to fluer or provoke Castro or an uncontrollable subordinate into an overt hostile reaction against the United States, are	DisplayFromDomain:
ComposedDate:01/29/1998ComposedDate_Time:11:40:22 AMSubject:AP story about today's release of documents ComposedDate_Time:PersonalAP story about today's release of documents ComposedDate_Time:Subject:AP story about today's release of documents ComposedDate_Time:Press. By MIKE FEINSLIBER Associated Press Writer WASHINGTON (AP) In 1962 Pentagon planners came up with a scheme to provoke Cuban dictator Fidel Castro into attacking the United States so that retailating U.S. forces could "destroy Castro with speed, force and determination," newly declassified records show. One plan, for example, called for concurrent air and sea assault exercises in the Caribbean, loading and deployment exercises on the East and Guif coasts of the United States, and air defense exercises in the Southeast United States to lure Castro into a hostile reaction. A year later, with that plan shelved, planners had a new idea: Provoke a war between Cuba and another Latin American state so the United States could come to the aid of the threatened nation through an invasion of Cuba or air strikes. But the planners got cold feet, the documents show. "Any of the contrived situations described above are inherently, extremely risky in our democratic system in which security can be maintained, after the fact, with very great difficulty," a memo said. "If the decision should be made to set up a contrived situation it should be one in which participation by U.S. personnel is limited only to the most high trusted covert personnel." The records were made public today by the Assassination necords Review Board, a government agency created by Congress to declassify and open to public inspection any records that mightshed light on President Kennedy's assassination on Nov. 22, 1963. At the time, Cuba was considered a possible sponsor of ass	DisplayDate:	01/29/1998
ComposedDate_Time11:40:22 AMSubject:AP story about today's release of documents coverige in the associated ress. An infinit reserved, the information contained in this news report may not be published, broadcast or otherwise distributed without the prior written authority of the Associated Press. By MIKE FEINSILBER Associated Press Writer WASHINGTON (AP) - In 1962 Pentagon planners came up with a scheme to provoke Cuban dictator Fidel Castro into attacking the United States so that retailating U.S. forces could "destroy Castro with speed, force and determination," newly declassified records show. One plan, for example, called for concurrent air and sea assault exercises in the Caribbean, loading and deployment exercises on the East and Gulf coasts of the United States, and air defense exercises in the Southeast United States to lure Castro into a hostile reaction. A year later, with that plan shelved, planners had a new idea: Provoke a war between Cuba and another Latin American state so the United States could come to the aid of the threatened nation through an invasion of Cuba or air strikes. But the planners got cold feet, the documents show. "Any of the contrived situation described above are inherently, extremely risky in our democratic system in which security can be maintained, after the fact, with very great difficulty," a memo said. "If the decision should be made to set up a contrived situation it should be one in which participation by U.S. personnel is limited only to the most high trusted covert personnel." The records were made public today by the Assassination Records Review Board, a government agency created by Congress to declassify and open to public inspection any records that mightshed light on President Kennedy's assassination on Nov. 22, 1963. At the time, Cuba was considered a possible sponsor of assassination suspect Lee Harvey Oswald because of his association with	DisplayDate_Time:	12:08:23 PM
Subject:AP story about today's release of documents Copyright 12901 the associated in tests. An ingent release the united in terms incurs report integration not be published, broadcast or otherwise distributed without the prior written authority of the Associated Press. By MIKE FEINSILBER Associated Press Write WASHINGTON (AP) In 1962 Pentagon planners came up with a scheme to provoke Cuban dictator Fidel Castro into attacking the United States so that retailating U.S. forces could "destroy Castro with speed, force and determination," newly declassified records show. One plan, for example, called for concurrent air and sea assault exercises in the Caribbean, loading and deployment exercises on the East and Gulf coasts of the United States, and air defense exercises in the Southeast United States to lure Castro into a hostile reaction. A year later, with that plan shelved, planners had a new idea: Provoke a war between Cuba and another Latin Americans state so the United States could come to the aid of the threatened nation through an invasion of Cuba or air strikes. But the planners got cold feet, the documents show. "Any of the contrived situations described above are inherently, extremely risky in our democratic system in which security can be maintained, after the fact, with very great difficulty," a memo said. "If the decision should be made to set up a contrived situation it should be one in which participation by U.S. personnel is limited only to the most high trusted covert personnel." The records were made public today by the Assassination Records Review Board, a government agency created by Congress to declassify and open to public inspection any records that mightshed light on President Kennedy's assassination on Nov. 22, 1963. At the time, Cuba was considered a possible sponsor of assassination suspect Lee Harvey Oswald because of his association with the Fair Play for Cuba Committee. "These military r	ComposedDate:	01/29/1998
 not be published, broadcast or otherwise distributed without the prior written authority of the Associated Press. By MIKE FEINSILBER Associated Press Writer WASHINGTON (AP) In 1962 Pentagon planners came up with a scheme to provoke Cuban dictator Fidel Castro into attacking the United States so that retaliating U.S. forces could "destroy Castro with speed, force and determination," newly declassified records show. One plan, for example, called for concurrent air and sea assault exercises in the Caribbean, loading and deployment exercises on the East and Gulf coasts of the United States, and air defense exercises in the Southeast United States to lure Castro into a hostile reaction. A year later, with that plan sheved, planners had a new idea: Provoke a war between Cuba and another Latin American state so the United States could come to the aid of the threatened nation through an invasion of Cuba or air strikes. But the planners got cold feet, the documents show. "Any of the contrived situations described above are inherently, extremely risky in our democratic system in which security can be maintained, after the fact, with very great difficulty," a memo said. "If the decision should be made to set up a contrived situation it should be one in which participation by U.S. personnel is limited only to the most high trusted covert personnel." The records were made public today by the Assassination Records Review Board, a government agency created by Congress to declassify and open to public inspection any records that mightshed light on President Kennedy's assassination on Nov. 22, 1963. At the time, Luba comsidered a possible sponsor of assassination suspect Lee Harvey Oswald because of his association with the Fair Play for Cuba Committee. "These military records further demonstrate how high on the U.S. government's caribbean Survey Group and dated Feb. 19, 1962, called for making Castro so fearful of an imminent U.S. attack that he would call up the Cuba militing, acusing "a complete disruption of	ComposedDate_Time:
 Press. By MIKE FEINSILBER Associated Press Writer WASHINGTON (AP) In 1962 Pentagon planners came up with a scheme to provoke Cuban dictator Fidel Castro into attacking the United States so that retaliating U.S. forces could "destroy Castro with speed, force and determination," newly declassified records show. One plan, for example, called for concurrent air and sea assault exercises in the Caribean, loading and deployment exercises on the East and Gulf coasts of the United States, and air defense exercises in the Southeast United States to lure Castro into a hostile reaction. A year later, with that plan shelved, planners had a new idea: Provoke a war between Cuba and another Latin American state so the United States could come to the aid of the threatened nation through an invasion of Cuba or air strikes. But the planners got cold feet, the documents show. "Any of the contrived situations described above are inherently, extremely risky in our democratic system in which security can be maintained, after the fact, with very great difficulty," a memo said. "If the decision should be made to set up a contrived situation it should be one in which participation by U.S. personnel is limited only to the most high trusted covert personnel." The records were made public today by the Assassination Records Review Board, a government agency created by Congress to declassify and open to public inspection any records that mightshed light on President Kennedy's assassination on Nov. 22, 1963. At the time, Cuba was considered a possible sponsor of assassination suspect Lee Harvey Oswald because of his association with the Fair Play for Cuba Committee. "These military records further demonstrate how high on the U.S. government's caribbean Survey Group and dated Feb. 19, 1962, called for making Castro so fearful of an imminent U.S. attack that he would call up the Cuban milita, causing "a complete disruption of the available labor force" for the 1962 sugar cane harvest. The same paper spelled out plans to "lure o	Subject:	AP story about today's release of documents Copyright 1990 The Associated Fress. All rights reserved, the information contained in this news report may with a scheme to provoke Cuban dictator Fidel Castro into attacking the United States so that retaliating U.S. forces could "destroy Castro with speed, force and determination," newly declassified records show. One plan, for example, called for concurrent air and sea assault exercises in the Caribbean, loading and deployment exercises on the East and Gulf coasts of the United States, and air defense exercises in the Southeast United States to lure Castro into a hostile reaction. A year later, with that plan shelved, planners had a new idea: Provoke a war between Cuba and another Latin American state so the United States could come to the aid of the threatened nation through an invasion of Cuba or air strikes. But the planners got cold feet, the documents show. "Any of the contrived situations described above are inherently, extremely risky in our democratic system in which security can be maintained, after the fact, with very great difficulty," a memo said. "If the decision should be made to set up a contrived situation it should be one in which participation by U.S. personnel is limited only to the most high trusted covert personnel." The records were made public today by the Assassination Records Review Board, a government agency created by Congress to declassify and open to public inspection any records that mightshed light on President Kennedy's assassination on Nov. 22, 1963. At the time, Cuba was considered a possible sponsor of assassination suspect Lee Harvey Oswald because of his association with the Fair Play for Cuba Committee. "These military records further demonstrate how high on the U.S. government's radar screen getting rid of the Castro government was in the early 1960s," said John R. Tunheim, a federal judge in Minnesota and chairman of the board. A paper written by the Defense Department's Caribbean Survey Group and dated Feb. 19, 1962, called for making Castro so fearful of an imminent U.S. attack that he would call up the Cuban militia, causing "a complete disruption of the ava		not be published, broadcast or otherwise distributed without the prior written authority of the Associated forces could "destroy Castro with speed, force and determination," newly declassified records show. One plan, for example, called for concurrent air and sea assault exercises in the Caribbean, loading and deployment exercises on the East and Gulf coasts of the United States, and air defense exercises in the Southeast United States to lure Castro into a hostile reaction. A year later, with that plan shelved, planners had a new idea: Provoke a war between Cuba and another Latin American state so the United States could come to the aid of the threatened nation through an invasion of Cuba or air strikes. But the planners got cold feet, the documents show. "Any of the contrived situations described above are inherently, extremely risky in our democratic system in which security can be maintained, after the fact, with very great difficulty," a memo said. "If the decision should be made to set up a contrived situation it should be one in which participation by U.S. personnel is limited only to the most high trusted covert personnel." The records were made public today by the Assassination Records Review Board, a government agency created by Congress to declassify and open to public inspection any records that mightshed light on President Kennedy's assassination on Nov. 22, 1963. At the time, Cuba was considered a possible sponsor of assassination suspect Lee Harvey Oswald because of his association with the Fair Play for Cuba Committee. "These military records further demonstrate how high on the U.S. government's radar screen getting rid of the Castro government was in the early 1960s," said John R. Tunheim, a federal judge in Minnesota and chairman of the board. A paper written by the Defense Department's Caribbean Survey Group and dated Feb. 19, 1962, called for making Castro so farful of an imminent U.S. attack that he would call up the Cuban militia, causing "a complete disruption of the available labor force" for the 1962 sugar cane harvest. The same paper spelled out plans to "lure or provoke Castro for example, called for concurrent air and sea assault exercises in the Caribbean, loading and deployment exercises on the East and Gulf coasts of the United States, and air defense exercises in the Southeast United States to lure Castro into a hostile reaction. A year later, with that plan shelved, planners had a new idea: Provoke a war between Cuba and another Latin American state so the United States could come to the aid of exercises on the East and Gulf coasts of the United States, and air defense exercises in the Southeast United States to lure Castro into a hostile reaction. A year later, with that plan shelved, planners had a new idea: Provoke a war between Cuba and another Latin American state so the United States could come to the aid of the threatened nation through an invasion of Cuba or air strikes. But the planners got cold feet, the documents show. "Any of the contrived situations described above are inherently, extremely risky in our democratic system in which security can be maintained, after the fact, with very great difficulty," a memo said. "If the decision should be made to set up a contrived situation it should be one in which participation by U.S. personnel is limited only to the most high trusted covert personnel." The records were made public today by the Assassination Records Review Board, a government agency created by Congress to declassify and open to public inspection any records that mightshed light on President Kennedy's assassination on Nov. 22, 1963. At the time, Cuba was considered a possible sponsor of assassination suspect Lee Harvey Oswald because of his association with the Fair Play for Cuba Committee. "These military records further demonstrate how high on the U.S. government's radar screen getting rid of the Castro government was in the early 1960s," said John R. Tunheim, a federal judge in Minnesota and chairman of the board. A paper written by the Defense Department's Caribbean Survey Group and dated Feb. 19, 1962, called for making Castro so fearful of an imminent U.S. attack that he would call up the Cuban militia, causing "a complete disruption of the available labor force" for the 1962 sugar cane harvest. The same paper spelled out plans to "lure or provoke Castro or an uncontrollable subordinate into an overt hostil recation against the United States, a reaction which would in turn create the justification for the U.S. to not only retaliate but destroy Castro with speed, fo States to lure Castro into a hostile reaction. A year later, with that plan shelved, planners had a new idea: Provoke a war between Cuba and another Latin American state so the United States could come to the aid of the threatened nation through an invasion of Cuba or air strikes. But the planners got cold feet, the documents show. "Any of the contrived situations described above are inherently, extremely risky in our democratic system in which security can be maintained, after the fact, with very great difficulty," a memo said. "If the decision should be made to set up a contrived situation it should be one in which participation by U.S. personnel is limited only to the most high trusted covert personnel." The records were made public today by the Assassination Records Review Board, a government agency created by Congress to declassify and open to public inspection any records that mightshed light on President Kennedy's assassination on Nov. 22, 1963. At the time, Cuba was considered a possible sponsor of assassination suspect Lee Harvey Oswald because of his association with the Fair Play for Cuba Committee. "These military records further demonstrate how high on the U.S. government's radar screen getting rid of the Castro government was in the early 1960s," said John R. Tunheim, a federal judge in Minnesota and chairman of the board. A paper written by the Defense Department's Caribbean Survey Group and dated Feb. 19, 1962, called for making Castro so fearful of an imminent U.S. attack that he would call up the Cuban militia, causing "a complete disruption of the available labor force" for the 1962 sugar cane harvest. The same paper spelled out plans to "lure or provoke Castro or an uncontrollable subordinate into an overt hostile reaction against the United States, a reaction which would in turn create the justification for the U.S. to not only retaliate but destroy Castro with speed, force and determination." A cover le Provoke a war between Cuba and another Latin American state so the United States could come to the aid of the threatened nation through an invasion of Cuba or air strikes. But the planners got cold feet, the documents show. "Any of the contrived situations described above are inherently, extremely risky in our democratic system in which security can be maintained, after the fact, with very great difficulty," a memo said. "If the decision should be made to set up a contrived situation it should be one in which participation by U.S. personnel is limited only to the most high trusted covert personnel." The records were made public today by the Assassination Records Review Board, a government agency created by Congress to declassify and open to public inspection any records that mightshed light on President Kennedy's assassination on Nov. 22, 1963. At the time, Cuba was considered a possible sponsor of assassination suspect Lee Harvey Oswald because of his association with the Fair Play for Cuba Committee. "These military records further demonstrate how high on the U.S. government's radar screen getting rid of the Castro government was in the early 1960s," said John R. Tunheim, a federal judge in Minnesota and chairman of the board. A paper written by the Defense Department's Caribbean Survey Group and dated Feb. 19, 1962, called for making Castro so fearful of an imminent U.S. attack that he would call up the Cuban militia, causing "a complete disruption of the available labor force" for the 1962 sugar cane harvest. The same paper spelled out plans to "luce or provoke Castro or an uncontrollable subordinate into an overt hostile reaction against the United States, a reaction which would in turn create the justification for the U.S. to not only retaliate but destroy Castro with speed, force and determination." A cover letter said the plans had been approved by the Joint Chiefs of Staff and Deputy Defense Secretary Roswell Gilpatric. It was stamped "top secret." But the board's documents, amounting to 6
 the threatened nation through an invasion of Cuba or air strikes. But the planners got cold feet, the documents show. "Any of the contrived situations described above are inherently, extremely risky in our democratic system in which security can be maintained, after the fact, with very great difficulty," a memo said. "If the decision should be made to set up a contrived situation it should be one in which participation by U.S. personnel is limited only to the most high trusted covert personnel." The records were made public today by the Assassination Records Review Board, a government agency created by Congress to declassify and open to public inspection any records that mightshed light on President Kennedy's assassination on Nov. 22, 1963. At the time, Cuba was considered a possible sponsor of assassination suspect Lee Harvey Oswald because of his association with the Fair Play for Cuba Committee. "These military records further demonstrate how high on the U.S. government's radar screen getting rid of the Castro government was in the early 1960s," said John R. Tunheim, a federal judge in Minnesota and chairman of the board. A paper written by the Defense Department's Caribbean Survey Group and dated Feb. 19, 1962, called for making Castro so fearful of an imminent U.S. attack that he would call up the Cuban militia, causing "a complete disruption of the available labor force" for the 1962 sugar cane harvest. The same paper spelled out plans to "luce or provoke Castro or an uncontrollable subordinate into an over th ostile reaction against the United States, a reaction which would in turn create the justification for the U.S. to not only retaliate but destroy Castro with speed, force and determination." A cover letter said the plans had been approved by the John Chiefs of Staff and Deputy Defense Secretary Roswell Gilpatric. It was stamped "top secret." But the board's documents, amounting to 600 pages, were silent on why the plans were not carried out. All the papers were written after the disastr documents show. "Any of the contrived situations described above are inherently, extremely risky in our democratic system in which security can be maintained, after the fact, with very great difficulty," a memo said. "If the decision should be made to set up a contrived situation it should be one in which participation by U.S. personnel is limited only to the most high trusted covert personnel." The records were made public today by the Assassination Records Review Board, a government agency created by Congress to declassify and open to public inspection any records that mightshed light on President Kennedy's assassination on Nov. 22, 1963. At the time, Cuba was considered a possible sponsor of assassination suspect Lee Harvey Oswald because of his association with the Fair Play for Cuba Committee. "These military records further demonstrate how high on the U.S. government's radar screen getting rid of the Castro government was in the early 1960s," said John R. Tunheim, a federal judge in Minnesota and chairman of the board. A paper written by the Defense Department's Caribbean Survey Group and dated Feb. 19, 1962, called for making Castro so fearful of an imminent U.S. attack that he would call up the Cuban militia, causing "a complete disruption of the available labor force" for the 1962 sugar cane harvest. The same paper spelled out plans to "lure or provoke Castro or an uncontrollable subordinate into an overt hostile reaction against the United States, a reaction which would in turn create the justification for the U.S. to not only retaliate but destroy Castro with speed, force and determination." A cover letter said the plans had been approved by the Joint Chiefs of Staff and Deputy Defense Secretary Roswell Gilpatric. It was stamped "top secret." But the board's documents, amounting to 600 pages, were silent on why the plans were not carried out. All the papers were written after the disastrous April 1961 invasion of democratic system in which security can be maintained, after the fact, with very great difficulty," a memo said. "If the decision should be made to set up a contrived situation it should be one in which participation by U.S. personnel is limited only to the most high trusted covert personnel." The records were made public today by the Assassination Records Review Board, a government agency created by Congress to declassify and open to public inspection any records that mightshed light on President Kennedy's assassination on Nov. 22, 1963. At the time, Cuba was considered a possible sponsor of assassination suspect Lee Harvey Oswald because of his association with the Fair Play for Cuba Committee. "These military records further demonstrate how high on the U.S. government's radar screen getting rid of the Castro government was in the early 1960s," said John R. Tunheim, a federal judge in Minnesota and chairman of the board. A paper written by the Defense Department's Caribbean Survey Group and dated Feb. 19, 1962, called for making Castro so fearful of an imminent U.S. attack that he would call up the Cuban militia, causing "a complete disruption of the available labor force" for the 1962 sugar cane harvest. The same paper spelled out plans to "lure or provoke Castro or an uncontrollable subordinate into an overt hostile reaction against the United States, a reaction which would in turn create the justification for the U.S. to not only retaliate but destroy Castro with speed, force and determination." A cover letter said the plans had been approved by the Joint Chiefs of Staff and Deputy Defense Secretary Roswell Gilpatric. It was stamped "top secret." But the board's documents, amounting to 600 pages, were silent on why the plans were not carried out. All the papers were written after the disastrous April 1961 invasion of Cuba's Bay of Pigs by Cuban exiles trained, armed and directed by the United States in said. "If the decision should be made to set up a contrived situation it should be one in which participation by U.S. personnel is limited only to the most high trusted covert personnel." The records were made public today by the Assassination Records Review Board, a government agency created by Congress to declassify and open to public inspection any records that mightshed light on President Kennedy's assassination on Nov. 22, 1963. At the time, Cuba was considered a possible sponsor of assassination suspect Lee Harvey Oswald because of his association with the Fair Play for Cuba Committee. "These military records further demonstrate how high on the U.S. government's radar screen getting rid of the Castro government was in the early 1960s," said John R. Tunheim, a federal judge in Minnesota and chairman of the board. A paper written by the Defense Department's Caribbean Survey Group and dated Feb. 19, 1962, called for making Castro so fearful of an imminent U.S. attack that he would call up the Cuban militia, causing "a complete disruption of the available labor force" for the 1962 sugar cane harvest. The same paper spelled out plans to "lure or provoke Castro or an uncontrollable subordinate into an overt hostile reaction against the United States, a reaction which would in turn create the justification for the U.S. to not only retaliate but destroy Castro with speed, force and determination." A cover letter said the plans had been approved by the Joint Chiefs of Staff and Deputy Defense Secretary Roswell Gilpatric. It was stamped "top secret." But the board's documents, amounting to 600 pages, were silent on why the plans were not carried out. All the papers were written after the disastrous April 1961 invasion of Cuba's Bay of Pigs by Cuban exiles trained, armed and directed by the United States in U.S. personnel is limited only to the most high trusted covert personnel." The records were made public today by the Assassination Records Review Board, a government agency created by Congress to declassify and open to public inspection any records that mightshed light on President Kennedy's assassination on Nov. 22, 1963. At the time, Cuba was considered a possible sponsor of assassination suspect Lee Harvey Oswald because of his association with the Fair Play for Cuba Committee. "These military records further demonstrate how high on the U.S. government's radar screen getting rid of the Castro government was in the early 1960s," said John R. Tunheim, a federal judge in Minnesota and chairman of the board. A paper written by the Defense Department's Caribbean Survey Group and dated Feb. 19, 1962, called for making Castro so fearful of an imminent U.S. attack that he would call up the Cuban militia, causing "a complete disruption of the available labor force" for the 1962 sugar cane harvest. The same paper spelled out plans to "lure or provoke Castro or an uncontrollable subordinate into an overt hostile reaction against the United States, a reaction which would in turn create the justification for the U.S. to not only retaliate but destroy Castro with speed, force and determination." A cover letter said the plans had been approved by the Joint Chiefs of Staff and Deputy Defense Secretary Roswell Gilpatric. It was stamped "top secret." But the board's documents, amounting to 600 pages, were silent on why the plans were not carried out. All the papers were written after the disastrous April 1961 invasion of Cuba's Bay of Pigs by Cuban exiles trained, armed and directed by the United States in by the Assassination Records Review Board, a government agency created by Congress to declassify and open to public inspection any records that mightshed light on President Kennedy's assassination on Nov. 22, 1963. At the time, Cuba was considered a possible sponsor of assassination suspect Lee Harvey Oswald because of his association with the Fair Play for Cuba Committee. "These military records further demonstrate how high on the U.S. government's radar screen getting rid of the Castro government was in the early 1960s," said John R. Tunheim, a federal judge in Minnesota and chairman of the board. A paper written by the Defense Department's Caribbean Survey Group and dated Feb. 19, 1962, called for making Castro so fearful of an imminent U.S. attack that he would call up the Cuban militia, causing "a complete disruption of the available labor force" for the 1962 sugar cane harvest. The same paper spelled out plans to "lure or provoke Castro or an uncontrollable subordinate into an overt hostile reaction against the United States, a reaction which would in turn create the justification for the U.S. to not only retaliate but destroy Castro with speed, force and determination." A cover letter said the plans had been approved by the Joint Chiefs of Staff and Deputy Defense Secretary Roswell Gilpatric. It was stamped "top secret." But the board's documents, amounting to 600 pages, were silent on why the plans were not carried out. All the papers were written after the disastrous April 1961 invasion of Cuba's Bay of Pigs by Cuban exiles trained, armed and directed by the United States in to public inspection any records that mightshed light on President Kennedy's assassination on Nov. 22, 1963. At the time, Cuba was considered a possible sponsor of assassination suspect Lee Harvey Oswald because of his association with the Fair Play for Cuba Committee. "These military records further demonstrate how high on the U.S. government's radar screen getting rid of the Castro government was in the early 1960s," said John R. Tunheim, a federal judge in Minnesota and chairman of the board. A paper written by the Defense Department's Caribbean Survey Group and dated Feb. 19, 1962, called for making Castro so fearful of an imminent U.S. attack that he would call up the Cuban militia, causing "a complete disruption of the available labor force" for the 1962 sugar cane harvest. The same paper spelled out plans to "lure or provoke Castro or an uncontrollable subordinate into an overt hostile reaction against the United States, a reaction which would in turn create the justification for the U.S. to not only retaliate but destroy Castro with speed, force and determination." A cover letter said the plans had been approved by the Joint Chiefs of Staff and Deputy Defense Secretary Roswell Gilpatric. It was stamped "top secret." But the board's documents, amounting to 600 pages, were silent on why the plans were not carried out. All the papers were written after the disastrous April 1961 invasion of Cuba's Bay of Pigs by Cuban exiles trained, armed and directed by the United States in At the time, Cuba was considered a possible sponsor of assassination suspect Lee Harvey Oswald because of his association with the Fair Play for Cuba Committee. "These military records further demonstrate how high on the U.S. government's radar screen getting rid of the Castro government was in the early 1960s," said John R. Tunheim, a federal judge in Minnesota and chairman of the board. A paper written by the Defense Department's Caribbean Survey Group and dated Feb. 19, 1962, called for making Castro so fearful of an imminent U.S. attack that he would call up the Cuban militia, causing "a complete disruption of the available labor force" for the 1962 sugar cane harvest. The same paper spelled out plans to "lure or provoke Castro or an uncontrollable subordinate into an overt hostile reaction against the United States, a reaction which would in turn create the justification for the U.S. to not only retaliate but destroy Castro with speed, force and determination." A cover letter said the plans had been approved by the Joint Chiefs of Staff and Deputy Defense Secretary Roswell Gilpatric. It was stamped "top secret." But the board's documents, amounting to 600 pages, were silent on why the plans were not carried out. All the papers were written after the disastrous April 1961 invasion of Cuba's Bay of Pigs by Cuban exiles trained, armed and directed by the United States in his association with the Fair Play for Cuba Committee. "These military records further demonstrate how high on the U.S. government's radar screen getting rid of the Castro government was in the early 1960s," said John R. Tunheim, a federal judge in Minnesota and chairman of the board. A paper written by the Defense Department's Caribbean Survey Group and dated Feb. 19, 1962, called for making Castro so fearful of an imminent U.S. attack that he would call up the Cuban militia, causing "a complete disruption of the available labor force" for the 1962 sugar cane harvest. The same paper spelled out plans to "lure or provoke Castro or an uncontrollable subordinate into an overt hostile reaction against the United States, a reaction which would in turn create the justification for the U.S. to not only retaliate but destroy Castro with speed, force and determination." A cover letter said the plans had been approved by the Joint Chiefs of Staff and Deputy Defense Secretary Roswell Gilpatric. It was stamped "top secret." But the board's documents, amounting to 600 pages, were silent on why the plans were not carried out. All the papers were written after the disastrous April 1961 invasion of Cuba's Bay of Pigs by Cuban exiles trained, armed and directed by the United States in on the U.S. government's radar screen getting rid of the Castro government was in the early 1960s," said John R. Tunheim, a federal judge in Minnesota and chairman of the board. A paper written by the Defense Department's Caribbean Survey Group and dated Feb. 19, 1962, called for making Castro so fearful of an imminent U.S. attack that he would call up the Cuban militia, causing "a complete disruption of the available labor force" for the 1962 sugar cane harvest. The same paper spelled out plans to "lure or provoke Castro or an uncontrollable subordinate into an overt hostile reaction against the United States, a reaction which would in turn create the justification for the U.S. to not only retaliate but destroy Castro with speed, force and determination." A cover letter said the plans had been approved by the Joint Chiefs of Staff and Deputy Defense Secretary Roswell Gilpatric. It was stamped "top secret." But the board's documents, amounting to 600 pages, were silent on why the plans were not carried out. All the papers were written after the disastrous April 1961 invasion of Cuba's Bay of Pigs by Cuban exiles trained, armed and directed by the United States in R. Tunheim, a federal judge in Minnesota and chairman of the board. A paper written by the Defense Department's Caribbean Survey Group and dated Feb. 19, 1962, called for making Castro so fearful of an imminent U.S. attack that he would call up the Cuban militia, causing "a complete disruption of the available labor force" for the 1962 sugar cane harvest. The same paper spelled out plans to "lure or provoke Castro or an uncontrollable subordinate into an overt hostile reaction against the United States, a reaction which would in turn create the justification for the U.S. to not only retaliate but destroy Castro with speed, force and determination." A cover letter said the plans had been approved by the Joint Chiefs of Staff and Deputy Defense Secretary Roswell Gilpatric. It was stamped "top secret." But the board's documents, amounting to 600 pages, were silent on why the plans were not carried out. All the papers were written after the disastrous April 1961 invasion of Cuba's Bay of Pigs by Cuban exiles trained, armed and directed by the United States in Department's Caribbean Survey Group and dated Feb. 19, 1962, called for making Castro so fearful of an imminent U.S. attack that he would call up the Cuban militia, causing "a complete disruption of the available labor force" for the 1962 sugar cane harvest. The same paper spelled out plans to "lure or provoke Castro or an uncontrollable subordinate into an overt hostile reaction against the United States, a reaction which would in turn create the justification for the U.S. to not only retaliate but destroy Castro with speed, force and determination." A cover letter said the plans had been approved by the Joint Chiefs of Staff and Deputy Defense Secretary Roswell Gilpatric. It was stamped "top secret." But the board's documents, amounting to 600 pages, were silent on why the plans were not carried out. All the papers were written after the disastrous April 1961 invasion of Cuba's Bay of Pigs by Cuban exiles trained, armed and directed by the United States in imminent U.S. attack that he would call up the Cuban militia, causing "a complete disruption of the available labor force" for the 1962 sugar cane harvest. The same paper spelled out plans to "lure or provoke Castro or an uncontrollable subordinate into an overt hostile reaction against the United States, a reaction which would in turn create the justification for the U.S. to not only retaliate but destroy Castro with speed, force and determination." A cover letter said the plans had been approved by the Joint Chiefs of Staff and Deputy Defense Secretary Roswell Gilpatric. It was stamped "top secret." But the board's documents, amounting to 600 pages, were silent on why the plans were not carried out. All the papers were written after the disastrous April 1961 invasion of Cuba's Bay of Pigs by Cuban exiles trained, armed and directed by the United States in Iabor force" for the 1962 sugar cane harvest. The same paper spelled out plans to "lure or provoke Castro or an uncontrollable subordinate into an overt hostile reaction against the United States, a reaction which would in turn create the justification for the U.S. to not only retaliate but destroy Castro with speed, force and determination." A cover letter said the plans had been approved by the Joint Chiefs of Staff and Deputy Defense Secretary Roswell Gilpatric. It was stamped "top secret." But the board's documents, amounting to 600 pages, were silent on why the plans were not carried out. All the papers were written after the disastrousBody:April 1961 invasion of Cuba's Bay of Pigs by Cuban exiles trained, armed and directed by the United States in an uncontrollable subordinate into an overt hostile reaction against the United States, a reaction which would in turn create the justification for the U.S. to not only retaliate but destroy Castro with speed, force and determination." A cover letter said the plans had been approved by the Joint Chiefs of Staff and Deputy Defense Secretary Roswell Gilpatric. It was stamped "top secret." But the board's documents, amounting to 600 pages, were silent on why the plans were not carried out. All the papers were written after the disastrous April 1961 invasion of Cuba's Bay of Pigs by Cuban exiles trained, armed and directed by the United States in in turn create the justification for the U.S. to not only retaliate but destroy Castro with speed, force and determination." A cover letter said the plans had been approved by the Joint Chiefs of Staff and Deputy Defense Secretary Roswell Gilpatric. It was stamped "top secret." But the board's documents, amounting to 600 pages, were silent on why the plans were not carried out. All the papers were written after the disastrous April 1961 invasion of Cuba's Bay of Pigs by Cuban exiles trained, armed and directed by the United States in determination." A cover letter said the plans had been approved by the Joint Chiefs of Staff and DeputyDefense Secretary Roswell Gilpatric. It was stamped "top secret." But the board's documents, amounting to 600 pages, were silent on why the plans were not carried out. All the papers were written after the disastrousBody:April 1961 invasion of Cuba's Bay of Pigs by Cuban exiles trained, armed and directed by the United States in		_
Defense Secretary Roswell Gilpatric. It was stamped "top secret." But the board's documents, amounting to 600 pages, were silent on why the plans were not carried out. All the papers were written after the disastrousBody:April 1961 invasion of Cuba's Bay of Pigs by Cuban exiles trained, armed and directed by the United States in 600 pages, were silent on why the plans were not carried out. All the papers were written after the disastrousBody:April 1961 invasion of Cuba's Bay of Pigs by Cuban exiles trained, armed and directed by the United States in Body: April 1961 invasion of Cuba's Bay of Pigs by Cuban exiles trained, armed and directed by the United States in Bodv:
	-
DeliveryPriority: N
DeliveryReport: B		В

DeliveryReport: ReturnReceipt: Categories: