Subject: Re: Photographic Expert

I have the general impression that the most prestigious technical school of photography (in terms of photographic technology, not artistic filmmaking) is at Rochester, New York. I pulled out HSCA Volume 6, and lo and behold, the HSCA used a consultant from The Rochester Institute of Technology School of Photographic Sciences. I then called the information operator in Rochester and obtained the following phone number for the "School of Photographic Arts and Sciences" at Rochester Institute of Technology: (716) 475-2716. I called that number to check and see if it was valid, and got a voice mail response from the "School of Photography." I did not leave any message. I thought this was called (or formerly called) the Eastman School of Photography, but the operator could find no listing for such a school. (Perhaps it was once called that. If we call them we could ask that question. My general impression, from a number of articles I have read over the years, is that the "Eastman" school "in Rochester" was the most prestigious institution re: film technology in the U.S. I am assuming that R.I.T.'s School of Photographic Arts and Sciences is one and the same, but we won't know unless we ask.) Other options, based on a perusal of pages 2 and 3 of HSCA Volume 6 are: The Aerospace Corporation in Los Angeles (Dave Montague has their address and phone number), and Los Alamos Scientific Laboratory in New Mexico. UCLA is reputed to have a prestigious school of photography also, but I'm not sure how much of its reputation is based on "motion-picture making as an art", vs. "film technology per se." This exhausts my thoughts on this subject. END
