Subject: Re: Have I given you this before?
BULL! As an eighteenth century rationalist who believes in the scientific method, I believe that there is only one reality, and that all things are knowable...unless evidence is switched, chains of custody are not properly recorded, and eyewitnesses recall things incorrectly (or lie). However, I agree that one should not utter such accusations lightly, since there are MANY possible explanations for evidence which does not come together. Conrad's attitude is mystical, not scientific...it leads to a defeatist attitude such as: "Why bother to figure things out? We never can know what happened anyway!" END
