Subject: Re: Evelyn Lincoln Estate

I would recommend two initial actions. 1) We should talk to Diakiese again about his role in creating the inventory. White's account indicates that he may have a more thorough knowledge of the estate than his initial statements indicate. We should ask him specifically about the diaries so that we can be certain that they all arrived at the JFK Library as required by the will. 2) We should continue our efforts to contact the Rays. Although this avenue is likely a dead end, it should be followed up. Dave mentioned that he is going to Florida on business soon and could follow up in person if they continue to avoid our telephone calls.

We met with Robert White and his attorney, David Glassman, in order to discuss his involvement with the estate of Evelyn Lincoln. Mr. White informed us that he first contacted Mrs. Lincoln in the early sixties by letter and received a polite reply and an autograph. He next wrote to her in the early seventies and again received a polite response, along with a PT 109 tie clip. Their relationship evolved from there to occasional correspondence and lunches. Throughout this time, Mrs. Lincoln occasionally began to give Mr. White items of Kennedy memorabilia for his collection and to authenticate items he wished to add to his collection from other sources. He assisted her by acting as a buffer between her and other collectors and researchers that approached her regarding Kennedy. By the eighties, the two had become family friends and remained so until her death. Despite their close friendship, Mr. White stated that Mrs. Lincoln rarely spoke about the assassination. According to White, she was psychologically and emotionally damaged by the assassination and it remained a very traumatic and troubling topic for her. White acknowledged that she had some "strange" ideas about Lyndon Johnson, but stated that she never spoke of or showed him any documents or evidence to support her ideas. Prior to Mrs. Lincoln's death, White stated that he never knew of or viewed the trunks and file cabinets dispensed by the Lincolns' wills. After Mrs. Lincoln's death, Mr. Lincoln showed White where the file cabinets were located in the Lincolns' apartment, but they were unable to open any of the combination locks that sealed the cabinets. Mr. Lincoln died about forty days later. Approximately two weeks after the
