Subject: Re: Web site coming online

Dear Mr. McAdams: Thank you for informing me of your progress. Good luck completing the site. To answer your questions, it is not a problem to have a link that allows people to send e-mail to the Review Board office. I have seen some web sites that have disclaimers on the top of the first page that state something to the effect of "This site is not affiliated with the Assassination Records Review Board." It would be helpful if you included something like that on your site. I will send you a blurb about the Review Board that includes who we are and what we have accomplished. In addition, I will send you a brochure that includes our logo. We do not have it in the format that you need (perhaps you can scan it?) I hope this answers your questions. Please do not hesitate to contact me if you have additional questions. Sincerely, Eileen Sullivan

 Subject: Web site coming online
 Hi, You may remember sending me -- about two months ago -- all the testimony that the ARRB has heard. I'm close to getting a web page with all of it online, but wanted to ask you about three things. 1. Can I assume that it is OK to have an e-mail link that allows people to send you e-mail? There is such a link on some other pages, but I wanted to be sure you didn't mind. Who knows, among the "MAKE MONEY FAST!" messages might be somebody with some useful information. 2. Am I allowed to use your logo on my site? My guess is that U.S. government logos are generically in the public domain, but this *does* raise the issue of how I can present my site and not give anybody the impression that it is an official ARRB site. I'll be happy to let you look at my ARRB page before it becomes "public" and give you an opportunity to let me know if you think there is any room for confusion on this point. If I am allowed to use the ARRB logo, is it something you could send me in WMF or EPS graphic format? 3. Do you have a little informational blurb about the ARRB that I could use? Something about the length of a press release, that describes the Board and recaps its activities? If you could send me something I would very much appreciate it. As for the technical stuff: if you can send a blurb and (perhaps) a copy of your logo as attachments to a return e-mail, I can handle that fine on this end. That should be a lot less work than mailing a floppy. Thanks very much for all your help. Take care. John
