 I am at work and cannot go into everything I would like, but will when time permits. Short version: I ran a shift in what we call "The Old Jail" here for over two years. It is directly across from the school book depository. It was right outside the window of my office. Jack Ruby's cell was also just outside my office door. It wasn't a cell really. We used it for what we called "the small holdover". You can put about twenty inmates in it while waiting to go to court, be taken back to their tank or whatever. This is where Ruby stayed. My impression is that he was allowed to basically set up light housekeeping during his stay in The Old Jail. I was told he had unlimited visitation privileges and that Sheriff Decker paid him an almost daily visit. I was told that Joe Campeisi came to visit many times, also that his door was just left open most of the time giving him free reign of the floor. I also worked at what we call "The Government Center Jail", for a long time. There is a heavy duty boiler plate door on the 7th floor, (supervisor's floor), that I was told has tons of records generated by local law enforcement on the assassination. This door is locked. I was the fire warden in this jail and as such had every key available to me. I could never find the key to this door and the serial number normally on the large brass tumbler had been ground off. I asked my Lieutenant about this. That's when he told me what was supposed to be in there and that only the sheriff and chief deputy had a key, because the records were sealed until 2001 by Uncle Sugar. Can't prove any of that, but this is what is told around the department. I know one thing. You ain't getting in 'nat door. I tried! Just a little to wet your appetite. Rocky Clayton, President Dallas Sheriff's Union BTW. If you find anything I say interesting, feel free to post it to your group.
