Subject: Re: Executive Protective Service

John Machado says that all of the records listed on the inventory were transferred to NARS. He does not have 258 Forms describing this transfer. John said that the Secret Service gave this material to NARS, which processed the materials and sent them to the respective presidential libraries. Possibly, some of this material might be in Record Group 87, the Secret Service RG at NARA. Or, all of it is at the JFK Library. The White House Police became the Executive Protective Service in 1970. The EPS is now the Uniformed Division of the Secret Service. The head of the Uniformed Division reports to the AD for OPO, which is under the Director of the Secret Service. Does USSS currently have custody of such records? Should we separately go to the Executive Protective Service?
