Subject: Priscilla McMillan Papers
During my most recent visit to The JFKL, Megan Denoyers and I were discussing Priscilla McMillan. I told Megan that McMillan had agreed to donate her papers to the JFK Collection, but not until her death. At this point, Megan volunteered that the Library would be willing to process the McMillan papers now. The work would be done at the Library and the records would then be ready to be made public immediately upon McMillan's death. Megan added that the Library personnel would do a much better processing job than the Archives. Megan said that we should let her know if we are interested in taking her up on the offer. She knows Priscilla. Megan said that they would work on one box at a time, if that is what Priscilla wanted, so that there would never be more than one box gone from her house at a time. Megan also noted that Priscilla might like the idea because after the Library got done with the materials, they would be better organized than they are now. Please advise me of your thoughts.
