Subject: Re: Message from New York

Andrew:I'm sorry life is so boring in NYC. Let's stay in touch. I've actually been in Manhattan twice in the last two weeks, but only for a few hours. I may be going back. We are working on something with CBS relative to their archival materials on the assassination. If I have to go back to New York, I may look you up. Hopefully, it won't be to bail you out after getting arrested at a demonstration. Don't do anything that I wouldn't have done. Stephanie did not lie when she said my address was ard16@columbia.edu. I am enjoying myself here, although I am working my ass off because of midterms in European history and geology coming up next week. I also have a big paper on Homer due tomorrow. The political atmosphere is quite tense here at Columbia. (What else would you expect? This isn't Brown!) An example: The International Socialist Organization (ISO) holds a vigil the night before Columbus Day to talk about all the bad stuff Columbus did. The very next day the College Republicans hold a Columbus Day BBQ complete with big posters of Christ himself! The ISO subsequently responds by holding a protest. They even went so far as to forcibly yank hot dogs out of BBQ-goers' hands. Security came out and broke up the BBQ, and nobody left happy. On top of that the clerical workers' union is on strike. I've been doing some little things to help the union, going to some meetings, flyering, etc. But I'm sick of the strike and I want it over. It started Thursday and has dragged on. But I still need politics, just not in New York. This weekend I am going to New Jersey with the College Democrats to campaign against Christie Whitman. We'll also stop by Staten Island on the way to try to pick up Susan Molinari's vacant seat. Should be fun. I registered to vote in New York City so I will cast my insignificant ballot against Emperor Giuliani as he cruises to his second coronation on Tuesday. Don't worry - I will switch my registration next year so I can make Ray Flynn the next Governor of
