Subject: Re: Frenchy
 we could say. There are dozens of people who have told dozens of stories over the years. We have concentrated our efforts on collecting records rather than recording recollections. People who have stories to tell have done so over the years, and -- keeping in mind that our mandate is records -- we have thought it best just to have people continue telling their stories in the ways that they deem best."I would be interested in Tom's thoughts on such a response.

 Subject: Re: FrenchyBelow is an inquiry from a researcher named Martin Shackelford that Jack was copied on in September 1997. He recently forwarded it to Tom, who sent it to me. I was not aware of this correspondence until now. Any thoughts?

 Subject: Re: FrenchyKarl: It would be interesting to know if Gerry Hemming is still telling the Frenchy story, and whether more could now be added to it. There is also cause to wonder what happened to the Fenton Report, long known to researchers but never seen--why isn't it among the HSCA documents released by the ARRB? I'll copy this to ARRB chair John Tunheim, to see if he has an answer to it. As for Gordon Novel, he has proven a bit slippery over the years--he was protected from Garrison by Ohio Gov. James Rhodes (the same guy who later praised the National Guardsmen who shot students at Kent State), showed up in the Watergate maze, and keeps turning up at odd moments in our clandestine history.
