 Bill, I put your train tickets and travel authorization in the FedEx package that Jerne is sending tonight. If it's OK with you, I recommend that you leave your day open and informal when you're here. You should try to roam the office and chat with staff and welcome them to stop by your office as well. I'll put out the word informally about lunch and I'm sure we'll get a good crowd. If there are any document/agency issues that you are especially interested in or concerned about let me know and we can set up a briefing with the appropriate staff members. Let me know if you want me to set anything up for you. Looking forward to seeing you next week.

 Jeremy: This message was sent yesterday to you, with copies to Tracy and to Jack. Only that to Jack went through, so I'm trying again...

 Jeremy: While talking with Jack recently, we discussed the topics of the outplacing of staff when the Board goes out of business, as well as the subject of the final report. I allowed as I thought that we had been so successful in organizing the work of the staff that I, for one, was feeling out of touch: we descend on Washington (now barely for a day), discuss some issues, vote some documents along the trail to release, and then go home. Jack and I agreed that it would be good for the Board to be more of a presence for staff these days, partly to show our interest in their work, to show our concern for their placement in new jobs after the demise of the Board, and to learn more about their work so that we might be better, more informed readers of the report (dare I say as authors of any part?), capable of offering detailed and constructive comments for improving the report. In any event, and also because of my recent conversation with you here in Princeton on related matters, I am planning to come to Washington
