C. The Review of the Garrison Records

1. Our training and experience has equipped us to evaluate and appraise collections of records and to make judgments and recommendations concerning their condition and treatment
2. On April 26, 1996, we inspected approximately three and one half file drawers of files relating to former New Orleans District Attorney Jim Garrison's investigation and prosecution of Clay Shaw for involvement in the assassination of President Kennedy. The review took place between approximately 9:30 am and 2:30 pm at the office of the District Attorney in New Orleans.
3. The records fall into four categories: investigative files, media interviews of various types, trial testimony, and "other documentation and artifacts." The records include original paper documents, photocopies, audio tapes in a wide variety of formats, dictabelts, newspaper clippings, and other objects (including shell casings).
4. After careful evaluation of the condition of entire collection and each of its component parts, we reached the following conclusions:
  - a. The order of the records has been seriously disturbed since they were inventoried by the HSCA in 1978 and later by ARRB staff in June 1995 and it appears as though records may be missing.
  - b. Although it is difficult through visual inspection to evaluate definitively the condition of the audio tapes which represent an important part of the collection, there are clear indications that they are in less than ideal condition. The current storage environment puts them at further risk.
5. It is our recommendation that the collection be processed in a professional archives that is equipped to meet the challenge offered by the wide variety of audio tape formats and types.
